It meant more than temporary inconvenience to himself. It meant that he must go into the market and sell securities which were partly his capital and from which came the modest income that enabled him to live as he did!

There was no other way unless he went to Austin. But he dared not do that—dared not think what Austin's action in the matter might be. And he knew that if Gerald were ever driven into hopeless exile, with Austin's knowledge of his disgrace rankling, the boy's utter ruin must result inevitably.

Yet—yet—how could he afford to do this—unoccupied, earning nothing, bereft of his profession, with only the chance in view that his chaosite might turn out stable enough to be marketable? How could he dare so strip himself? Yet there was no other way. It had to be done, and done at once—the very first thing in the morning, before it became too late.

And at first, in the bitter resentment of the necessity, his impulse was to turn on Gerald and bind him to good conduct by every pledge the boy could give. At least there would be compensation. Yet with the thought came the clear conviction of its futility. The boy had brushed too close to dishonor not to recognize it. And if this were not a lifelong lesson to him no promises forced from him in his dire need and distress, no oaths, no pledges could bind him. No blame, no admonition, no scorn, no contempt, no reproach, could help him to see more clearly the pit of destruction than he could see now.

"You need sleep, Gerald," he said quietly. "Don't worry. I'll see that your check is not dishonored. All you have to see to is yourself. Good night, my boy."

But Gerald could not speak, and so Selwyn left him and walked slowly back to his own room, where he seated himself at his desk, grave, absent eyed, his unfilled pipe between his teeth.

And he sat there until he had bitten clean through the amber mouthpiece, so that the brier bowl fell clattering to the floor. By that time it was full daylight, but Gerald was still asleep. He slept late into the afternoon, but that evening, when Selwyn and Lansing came in to persuade him to go with them to Silverside, Gerald was gone.

They waited another day for him He did not appear. And that night they left for Silverside without him

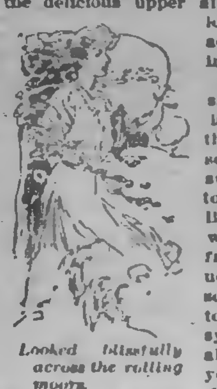
Chapter 17

DURING that week end at Silverside Boots behaved like a school lad run wild. With Drina's hand in his, the other children and half a dozen dogs as advanced guard and heavily flanked by the Gerard battalion, he scoured the moorlands from Surf point to the Hither woods, from Wonder head to Sky pond.

Nina, Eileen and Selwyn formed a lagging and leisurely rear guard, though always within signaling distance of Boots and the main body, and when necessary the two ex-army men wigwagged to each other across the uplands to the endless excitement and gratification of the children.

Eileen and Selwyn were standing on one of the treeless hills, a riotous tangle of grasses and wild flowers, looking out to sea across Sky pond. He had a rod, and as he stood he idly switched the gayly colored flies backward and forward.

Standing there [illegible] swimming in the delicious upper air currents, she looked blissfully across the rolling moors.



Looked blissfully across the rolling moors.

"After all," she said, "what more is there than this—earth and sea and sky and sun and a friend to show them to? Because, as I wrote you, the friend is quite necessary in the scheme of things to round out the symmetry of it all. I suppose you're dying to dangle those flies in Brier Water to see whether there are any trout there. Well, there are. Austin stocked it years ago, and he never fishes, so no doubt it's full of fish."

The Brier Water, a cold, deep, leisurely stream, deserved its name. If anybody ever haunted it with hostile designs upon its fishy denizens, Austin at least never did. Belted kingfisher, heron, mink and perhaps a furtive small boy with pole and sinker and barnyard worm—these were the only foes the trout might dread. As for a man and a fly rod, they knew him not, nor was there much chance for casting a line, because the water everywhere flowed under weeds, arched thickets of brier and grass and leafy branches crisscrossed above.

"This place is impossible," said Selwyn scornfully. "What is Austin about to let it all grow up and run wild"—

He reeled in his line until only six inches of the gossamer leader remained free. From this dangled a single silver bodied fly, glittering in the wind.

"There's a likely pool hidden under those briers," he said. "I'm going to poke the top of my rod under—this way— Hah!" as a heavy splash sounded from depths unseen and the reel screamed as he struck.

Up and down, under banks and over shallows, rushed the invisible fish, and Selwyn could do nothing for awhile but let him go when he insisted and check and recover when the fish permitted.

Eileen, a spray of green mint between her vivid lips, watched the performance with growing interest, but when at length a big, fat, struggling speckled trout was cautiously but successfully lifted out into the grass she turned her back until the gallant fighter had departed this life under a merciful whack from a stick.

"That," she said faintly, "is the part I don't care for. Is he out of all pain? What? Didn't feel any? Oh, are you quite sure?"

She walked over to him and looked down at the beautiful victim of craft.

"Oh, well," she sighed, "you are very clever, of course, and I suppose I'll eat him, but I wish he were alive again down there in those cool, sweet depths!"

"Killing frogs and insects and his smaller brother fish?"

"Did he do that?"

"No doubt of it. And if I hadn't landed him a heron or a mink would have done it sooner or later. That's what a trout is for—to kill and be killed."

She smiled, then sighed. The taking of life and the giving of it were mysteries to her. She had never wittingly [illegible] anything.

"[illegible] say that it doesn't hurt the [illegible]" she asked.

"There are no nerves in the jaw muscles of a trout— Hah!" as his rod twitched and swerved under water and his reel sang again.

"Let me try," she said when the coup de grace had been administered to a lusty, brilliant tinted bull trout. And, rod in hand, she bent breathless and intent over the bushes, cautiously thrusting the tip through a thicket of mint.

She lost two fish, then hooked a third, a small one, but when she lifted it gasping into the sunlight she shivered and called to Selwyn:

"Unhook it and throw it back! I—I simply can't stand that!"

Splash! went the astonished trout, and she sighed her relief.

"There's no doubt about it," she said, "you and I certainly do belong to different species of the same genus. Men and women are separate species. Do you deny it?"

"I should hate to lose you that way," he returned teasingly.

"Well, you can't avoid it. I gladly admit that woman is not too closely related to man. We don't like to kill things. It's an ingrained distaste, not merely a matter of ethical philosophy. You like to kill, and it's a trait common also to children and other predatory animals, which fact," she added airily, "convinces me of woman's higher civilization."

"It would convince me, too," he said, "if woman didn't eat the things tha man kills for her."

"I know. Isn't it horrid? Oh, dear, we're neither of us very high in the scale yet—particularly you."

"Well, I've advanced some since the good old days when a man went wooing with a club," he suggested.

"You may have. But, anyway, you don't go wooing. As for man collectively, he has not progressed so very far," she added demurely. "As an example that dreadful Draymore man actually hurt my wrist."

Selwyn looked up quickly, a shade of frank annoyance on his face and a vision of the fat sybarite before his eyes. He turned again to his fishing, but his shrug was more of a shudder than appeared to be complimentary to Percy Draymore.

She had divined somehow that it annoyed Selwyn to know that men had importuned her. She had told him of her experience as innocently as she had told Nina, and with even less embarrassment. But that had been long ago, and now, without any specific reason, she was not certain that she had acted wisely, although it always amused her to see Selwyn's undisguised impatience whenever mention was made of such incidents.

So, to torment him, she said, "Of course it is somewhat exciting to be asked to marry people—rather agreeable than otherwise."

"What!"

Waist deep in bay bushes he turned toward her where she sat on the trunk of an oak which had fallen across the stream. Her arms balanced her body; her ankles were interlocked. She swung her slim, russet shod feet above the brook and looked at him with a touch of coquetry new to her and to him.

"Of course it's amusing to be told you are the only woman in the world," she said, "particularly when a girl has a secret fear that men don't consider her quite grown up."

"You once said," he began impatiently, "that the idiotic importunities of those men annoyed you."

"Why do you call them idiotic?" with pretense of hurt surprise. "A girl is honored"—

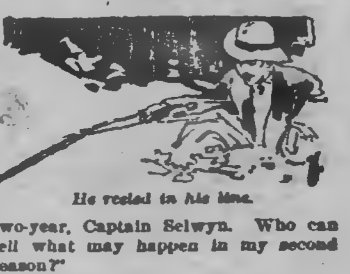
"Oh, bosh!"

"Captain Selwyn!"

"I beg your pardon," he said sulkily and fumbled with his reel.

She surveyed him, head a trifle on one side, the very incarnation of youthful malice in process of satisfying a desire for tormenting.

"When I pretended I was annoyed by what men said to me I was only a yearling," she observed. "Now I'm a two-year, Captain Selwyn. Who can tell what may happen in my second season?"



He reeled in his line.

"You said that you were not the—the marrying sort," he insisted.

"Nonsense. All girls are. There are men," she said dreamily, "who might hope for a kinder reception next winter."

"Oh, no," he said coolly, "there are no such gentlemen. If there were you wouldn't say so."

"Yes, I would. And there are!"

"How many?" jeeringly and now quite reassured.

"One!"

"You can't frighten me," with a shade less confidence. "You wouldn't tell if there was."

"I'd tell you."

"Me?" with a sudden slump in his remaining stock of reassurance.

"Certainly. I tell you and Nina things of that sort. And when I have fully decided to marry I shall, of course, tell you both before I inform other people."

How the blood in her young veins was racing and singing with laughter! How thoroughly she was enjoying something to which she could give neither reason nor name! But how satisfying it all was—whatever it was that amused her in this man's uncertainty and in the faint traces of an irritation as unreasoning as the source of it!

"Really, Captain Selwyn," she said, "you are not one of those old fashioned literary landmarks who objects through several chapters to a girl's marrying, are you?"

"Yes," he said, "I am."

"You're quite serious?"

"Quite."

"You won't let me?"

"No; I won't."

"Why?"

"I want you myself," he said, smiling at last.

"That is flattering, but horridly selfish. In other words, you won't marry me and you won't let anybody else do it."

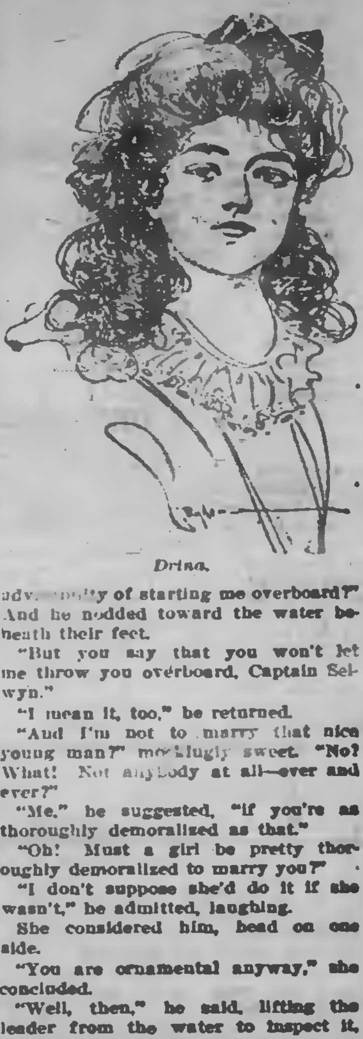
"You're capable of anything today," he said. "Were you considering the advisability of starting me overboard?" And he nodded toward the water beneath their feet.



Drina.

"But you say that you won't let me throw you overboard, Captain Selwyn."

"I mean it, too," he returned.

"And I'm not to marry that nice young man?" mockingly sweet. "No? What! Not anybody at all—ever and ever?"

"Me," he suggested, "if you're as thoroughly demoralized as that."

"Oh! Must a girl be pretty thoroughly demoralized to marry you?"

"I don't suppose she'd do it if she wasn't," he admitted, laughing.

She considered him, head on one side.

"You are ornamental anyway," she concluded.

"Well, then," he said, lifting the leader from the water to inspect it, "will you have me?"

"Oh, but is there nothing to recommend you except your fatal beauty?"

"My mustache," he ventured. "It's considered very useful when I'm mentally perplexed."

"It's clipped too close. I have told you again and again that I don't care for it clipped like that. Your mind would be a perfect blank if you couldn't get hold of it."

"And to become imbecile," he said, "I've only to shave it."

She threw back her head and her clear laughter thrilled the silence. He laughed, too, and sat with elbows on his thighs, dabbling the crinkled leader to and fro in the pool below.

"So you won't have me?" he said.

"You haven't asked me—have you?"

"Well, I do now."

She mused, the smile resting lightly on lips and eyes.

"Wouldn't such a thing astonish Nina?" she said.

"Marriage," she said, pursuing her thoughts aloud, "is curiously unnecessary to happiness. Take our pleasure in each other, for example. It has from the beginning been perfectly free from silliness and sentiment."

"Naturally," he said. "I'm old enough to be safe."

"Well, then," he said, "I'm dreadfully unsafe, but yet you've managed to escape. Is that it?"

"Perhaps. You are attractive to women! I've heard that often enough to be convinced. Why, even I can see what attracts them"—she turned to look at him—"the way your head and shoulders set—and—well, the—rest. It's rather superior of me to have escaped sentiment, don't you think so?"

"Indeed I do. Few—few escape where many meet to worship at my frisky feet, and this I say without conceit is due to my mustachios. Tangled in those like web tied flies, imprisoned hearts complain in sighs—in fact, the situation vies with moments in Boccaccio."

Her running comment was her laughter, ringing deliciously amid the trees until a wild bird, restlessly attentive, ventured a long, sweet response from the tangled green above them.

After their laughter the soberness of reaction left them silent for awhile. The wild bird sang and sang, dropping fearlessly nearer from branch to branch until in his melody she found the key to her dreamy thoughts.

Will be Installed in a Short Time—Is Operated by Water Pressure, Which Makes an Accident Impossible—Alterations Being Made to Store.

A passenger elevator of the latest and most modern design will be installed in the Beehive within a short time for the convenience of the large number of customers who patronise this store. The elevator is manufactured and installed by the Otis-Fensom Elevator Company, of Toronto, and the operating mechanism is on the same principle as that of the lift lock, and makes it absolutely safe to travel in. No cables are used, the motive power being water, which is sent through a pipe near the bottom and is of sufficient pressure to raise a load of 1500 pounds. The speed is 100 feet per minute, but can be regulated to suit conditions. On descending, a 10 1-2 inch plunger, which is incased in a 12-inch cylinder, forces the water out through the supply pipe, and this arrangement makes it impossible for an accident to occur.

Alterations are being made in the third storey of the building. A brick wall will be removed, a new floor built, and other improvements made. One half of the space will be used as a fancy goods department, and the other for millinery. The elevator will be installed at the centre of the east end of the store, and will connect with all departments. The Beehive is to be congratulated on making such a progressive move.

TYPHOID IN NORTH ONTARIO

Special to the Review.

Elk City, Ont., Oct. 5.—The typhoid situation all through Northern Ontario is very serious. The disease is prevalent in Cobalt, Liskeard, Haileybury, Latchford and here, and deaths are an almost daily occurrence. Swarms of flies are believed to carry contagion as a result of unsanitary conditions.

PETERBOROUGH HARDWARE CO. TO BUILD LARGE WAREHOUSE

On George Street, Just South of Kinnear Building—Ask Council for Permission to Have Siding Put In.

Mr R. F. McWilliams, acting for the Peterborough Hardware Company, addressed the members of the City Council last night and asked them to allow a railway siding to be built across George street for the use of the company, who intend erecting a warehouse on the property immediately south of the Kinnear building. It was impossible to secure a siding from the track to the east of the property as the sharp curves which would be necessary would not allow an engine or car to move with safety. With a siding in from George street, both companies—the Hardware Company and Kinnear Co.—would be accommodated. This was the only feasible way of getting into the property. If the request was granted traffic would not be impeded by cars blocking the street. There would only be an average of a car a week and the public would not be put to any more inconvenience than was absolutely necessary. The C.P.R. was satisfied with the proposition and as the company wished to erect the warehouse as soon as possible he asked for prompt action on the part of the Council.

Ald. Gillespie said that in company with Ald. Metheral and Duffus, he had looked over the property and had found that sharp curves would be necessary if the siding was built from the line running past the Houedry mill, and also considerable filling up would have to be done.

Ald. Buller objected to a siding being built across George street. The street was cut up badly enough at the present time and the citizens in the south end were against such a proceeding. The matter had been looked into before by a former Council, but they had not been in favor of it.

Ald. Metheral said that there was no way to get a siding in from the rear that would suit both parties. One could be built by using a sharp curve but only the Hardware Company would be benefitted. In the event of a siding across George street he did not think that traffic would be interfered with and further stated that he favored granting the request.

Ald. Bradburn was in favor of letting the matter stand for a while so to allow all the members of the Council to inspect the property. There was every reason to believe that the property in the section mentioned would be utilized for warehouses and something would have to be done in the matter of sidings. If the siding from George street was granted the Council should ask that no inconvenience was caused to traffic.

On motion it was decided that the members of the Council should inspect the property before giving a decision.

Guy Brothers

Easily the best turn in the olio of Guy Brothers' Minstrel show at the Grand last night was the "strong men" specialty by Manteil Bros. The team did a very skilful act, exhibiting great strength and muscle control, and the performers are worthy of a prominent place on any vaudeville programme. Syner and Engel are dancers of ability, and Harvey Dunn in his bag punching act earned considerable applause.

The first part was only fair, no startling features being introduced. The best vocalism was shown by Albert Guy, who sang most acceptably, "If I'd a Thousand Lives to Live." The orchestra carried by the company is a superb one, and played the accompaniments and overtures in a highly satisfactory manner.

The next attraction will be "The Bachelor," with Charles Cherry.

Betrayed by His Disguise.

In one of the principal western cities the proprietor of a large jewelry store reported to the chief of police an extensive diamond robbery. He was asked by the chief if he suspected any one.

"Yes, sir," hesitatingly answered the merchant. "Although we have no proof. But a man whom I have known for twenty-five years was in the store a day or two before the robbery, looking round and appearing to be ill at ease. He has since disappeared."

"What kind of looking man was he?"

"Well," said the chief after a moment's thought, "I hope to be able to give you some news of him soon."

Then he sent this telegram to the police authorities of several other cities:

"Arrest tall man with close cropped head and white upper lip. Diamond thief."

The next day he received this dispatch from a town in Missouri:

"Got diamond thief. Have recovered goods. Am holding him subject to your order."—Youth's Companion.

"We put up luncheons to be taken out."

DISASTERS ON MONT BLANC.

The Worst Occurred in 1870 and Cost Eleven Lives.

In the long list of disasters which darken the history of Mont Blanc the worst, according to Edward Whymper, the famous mountain climber, occurred to a scratch party in 1870.

The amateur Alpinists were two Americans, Mr. Randall and Mr. McBean, and a Scotch minister, the Rev. G. McCorkindale of Gourock. They took with them as guides or assistants no fewer than eight persons from Chamonix, a quite sufficient number. As is usual, they passed the night at the inn upon the rocks which are called the Grand Mulets.

On the next day, writes Professor Whymper in the Strand, a number of persons below watched their progress through telescopes. They were seen to arrive on the summit and to begin the descent. By that time the weather had changed. The wind was something frightful.

Even 12,000 feet below it was seen whirling the snow about so that the members of the party were obliged to throw themselves down to avoid being carried away by it. Then the summit became clouded and was not seen again for eight days.

No one came back, and on Sept. 7 fourteen men from Chamonix started out to try to learn something. Bad weather came on again, and it was not until the 17th that the fate of the party was ascertained. When the rescue party got up they found Mr. McCorkindale and two of the porters about 750 feet below the top, with their heads right way up, but with their clothes somewhat torn, as if they had slipped and fallen.

About 300 feet higher up they came upon Mr. McBean and another porter sitting down, the former with his head leaning on one hand and the elbow on a knapsack.

Upon Mr. McBean a notebook was found containing several entries in respect to the occasion. All the five corpses were hard frozen. They were put into sacks and dragged down to Chamonix. It took three days to transport them. The bodies of the six others have not yet been recovered, but they will probably come to light in the course of a few years.

One of the earliest avalanche accidents on Mont Blanc occurred in 1820, when Dr. Hamel, a Russian, set out on Aug. 18 to go up Mont Blanc, accompanied by two Englishmen and eight guides. They had ascended to a height of more than 14,000 feet, with five guides in front, who were cutting or making steps, when all at once the snow above them gave way and the entire party was carried down a thousand feet over the slopes up which they had toiled.

Snow again broke away above and more or less covered up the whole party. Some of them struggled out, but three of the leading guides were buried into a crevasse and buried under an immense mass of snow.

Ten years afterward, when conducting another tourist up Mont Blanc by the same route, one of the surviving guides pointed to the crevasse and said to his employer, "They are there."

He was wrong. At that time (1830) the bodies were no doubt a considerable distance from the spot where the accident occurred, for the dismembered remains of the three unfortunates commenced to reappear at the lower end of the Glacier des Bossons in 1861, more than four miles away in a direct line from the place where they perished, and must have traveled down on an average at the rate of 500 feet per annum.

Gold on Desolation Island.

Kerguelen, or the island of Desolation, may be the scene of the next gold rush. Situated midway between the Cape of Good Hope and Australia, it is one of the dreariest and most forbidding spots on the surface of the globe. But the captain of a brig, the Carmen, who spent four months there hunting sea elephants, has made a discovery which may lead to important developments. He picked up a pretty little nugget of gold among the pebbles while walking on the shore. The Carmen has arrived at Melbourne with 150 tons of oil, the product of a couple of thousand sea elephants shot by the captain and his men. They also report the discovery of valuable deposits of coal, which they declare to be excellent fuel. Kerguelen belongs to France by right of discovery.

Preventable Accidents.

The American Museum of Safety and Sanitation in its latest bulletin calls attention to the fact that in 1908, in the whole country, from all causes, accidents totaled 500,000 persons, "which is 500 regiments strong, and these victims of the perils of peace would be hours in passing a given point." The bulletin adds that in "America the insurance interests estimate the annual loss to companies from preventable accidents to be $125,000,000. This does not include costs of defending suits at law, in which the person injured receives in judgments scarcely $500 on the average, of which his lawyer usually gets one-half."

Neptune's Belts.

Neptune, the most distant known planet of the solar system, presents to the ordinary telescope only a small greenish disk, on which no distinct markings are visible. But recently telescopic observations have revealed indications of the existence of streaks on Neptune bearing a resemblance to the belts of Jupiter. A few years ago similar streaks were seen on Uranus. Saturn also possesses them, so that it may be said that cloudlike belts are a feature common of all the four greater outer planets.

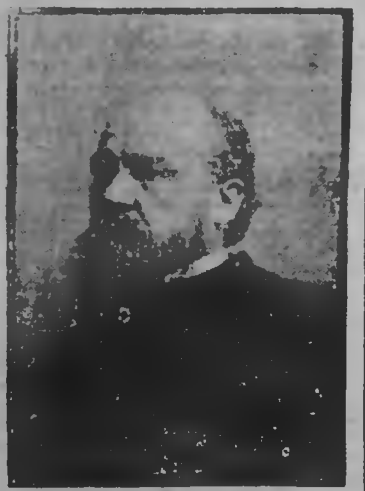
REV. E. A. YOUNG PASSES AWAY AT HIS HOME, IN BRANTFORD

At Age of Sixt-yFive Years, Preacher, Lecturer and Author, Succumbs in Effects of Accident Which He Met With a Year Ago.

Toronto, Oct. 6.—Rev. Egerton Ryerson Young, noted Canadian missionary and author, died yesterday morning at his home in Bradford, from injuries received in a runaway accident about a year ago. At that time he was thrown from his rig and although it was not thought he was injured beyond a few bruises, internal troubles developed, and in June he was operated on. This, however, failed to afford permanent relief, and he sank gradually until the end.

Rev. Mr. Young was born in Smith's Falls in 1840, the son of Rev. William Young, pioneer Methodist preacher. He was educated in the rural and grammar schools of the county, and at the Toronto Model School. He left home at the age of 16 and taught school until 1863, when he entered the ministry, being stationed at Thorold, and vicinity for four years. After his ordination he became pastor of the First Church of Hamilton. In 1867 he married Elizabeth Bingham of Bradford, and the following spring was called by the mission authorities to Norway House, in the Northwest Territories. Here he began his famous missionary journeys, and as a result of his work, new missions were opened, and new tribes brought under Government control. Trusted by the Indians, as well as by the white men, he became a successful intermediary, and negotiated several treaties. After eight years of this work, Mrs. Young's health failed and he returned to Ontario to resume pastoral work, having charges at Port Perry, Colborne, Bowmanville, Meaford and Brampton.



REV. E. R. YOUNG.

From the last named post he was called to England where he began his career as a lecturer and author. His first work was "By Canoe and Dog Train," containing graphic sketches of native life and character, and he subsequently wrote "The Apostle of the North, James Evans," "My Dogs in Northland," and several other narratives of life among the Indians. During his lecture tour he met many distinguished people in America, England and Australia, having been entertained at the White House, and at the homes of many prominent English men of affairs. Mr. Young was planning another trip to Australia when he was laid low by the accident.

It was his work among the young men particularly that bound him to the hearts of the people. He was a man of fascinating character. He organized Young Men's Mission Bands and scores of young men are now in the ministry, as a result of their contact with this celebrated divine. At Richmond College, England, he was responsible for nine young men entering mission work.

His widow and family of five children survive. The children are: Rev. E. R. Young, B.A., Chatsworth; Mrs. R. N. Holme, Lancaster, Eng.; Mrs. (Rev.) A. B. FitzGerald, Hilton, N.J., and Mrs. Newton H. Brown, Toronto.

The funeral will be held at Bradford at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening, and interment will take place at Bowmanville on the arrival of the noon train on Thursday.

BERNIER HAS FAITH IN BOTH

Quebec, Oct. 6.—The Government steamer Arctic arrived yesterday morning at 8 o'clock. She steamed up the harbor, looking as neat and trim as the day she sailed from the port of Quebec, fourteen months ago. As soon as the little vessel came alongside the King's wharf and a gangway was placed in position a number of relatives of the crew hastened aboard, and for a time all was confusion on the ship's deck. Captain Bernier and every member of the crew looked the picture of health, and were in the best of spirits.

A number of newspapermen from various parts of Canada were among those who crowded on board the Arctic after she was securely moored. They surrounded Captain Bernier and bombarded him with a multitude of questions. At first he was reluctant to speak, until Mr. Beland, Quebec agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department, came to the newspapermen's rescue and told the captain he was at liberty to tell his story to the scribes. Captain Bernier needed no second bidding; nevertheless, it was evident that he was cautious, and kept back something which he was determined the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should hear first. It was also evident that Captain Bernier believes in Dr. Cook, though he does not discredit the veracity of Commander Peary. He said he believed that both Dr. Cook and Commander Peary reached the Pole, or very near it, but was of the opinion that the member of the New York Arctic Club, Dr. Cook, reached the goal first. He said the Pole was 90 degrees north, and, according to Dr. Cook's statement, he reached 89.49-56, which made it clear that he was within a couple of miles of the actual Pole.

FRANCE GETTING VERY RESTLESS

Paris, Oct. 6.—The preparations for the extension of Spain's operations in Morocco, involving the sending of heavy reinforcements, are creating increasing uneasiness in Paris.

The Petit Parisian, a journal owned by Minister of Commerce Dupuy, in which is regarded as an inspired article, says that Spain's progress seems to go beyond the object originally communicated to the powers. It provokes apprehension in Europe, especially in London and Paris. The colonial authorities of Algeria have notified Paris of the existence of fanatical excitement in the interior, and speak of danger along the Algerian frontier if General Marina, the commander of the Spanish forces in Morocco, attempts to push his expedition southward from Zeluan.

In conclusion, the paper intimates that the reports from the Interior of Spain indicate that there is grave danger of serious trouble at home as soon as the country is denuded of troops.

Emperor Francis Joseph has raised Countess Sophia Choteck Von Chotova, the morgantic wife of the heir apparent, Archduke Francis Ferdinand, to the rank of duchess, with the title of highness. COAL MAGNATES ARE ACCUSED Halifax, N.S., Oct. 6.—Information was laid here yesterday before Stipendiary Magistrate Fielding by J. B. McLachlan, secretary and treasurer of the United Mine Workers in Nova Scotia, against three well-known provincial coal magnates, charging them with conspiring and combining with each other and others to unduly limit the facilities for the production and supplying of coal in Nova Scotia, and to unduly lessen competition in the production and sale of coal in the Province of Nova Scotia, and to unreasonably enhance the price.

The information charges them with having continued the conspiracy combination, etc., at divers times, from the first day of January, 1902, to the time of the laying of this information.

COULD HAVE MADE NORTHWEST PASSAGE AS EASY AS QUEBEC

But Had Not Orders to Do So, Says Capt. Bernier, in Writing to Rev. Dr. Marsh—Capt. Amusden Will Prove Correctness of Bernier's Theory—Explorer May Lecture Here.

Rev. Dr. Marsh has received a letter from Capt. Bernier, the celebrated Arctic explorer, who has just arrived from his expedition to the polar regions. The letter is dated Quebec city, Oct. 3rd. It reads as follows:—

Dear Dr. Marsh:

I received your letter dated July 29th, 1908, and am writing at the first place I have the opportunity to answer at. I have carried a Canadian exploration to the largest Arctic Archipelago islands, and could have made the northwest passage as easy as going to Quebec, but I had not the orders to do so. But I must be thankful for having accomplished so much with the little "Arctic," which now people have to acknowledge has done her duty as her commander has tried to do his.

Now that the north pole has been discovered, it matters a great deal to me ,after having spent $2,000 of my own money, and having had the privilege of helping the discoverer to get there. But I have the consolation of seeing that Capt. Amunsden will do the drift with the old "Fram." Time will tell whether my plans were right in wanting to do the same thing many years ago.

We have lost the honor of discovering the pole for Canada but I have made claims for the last western island for Canada, adn all lands to the eastward of the 141st degree of longtitude. Time will tell if I am right, as I have on my side for Canada both Russia and America, who have passed their verdict, as I have collected licenses from American whalers and southern whalers, all admitting our claims without a single gun being fired. I have many friends on both sides who admit that I was right in claiming for Canada what some of our forefathers have labored so hard to secure, such as poor Franklin and others

Now, dear doctor, I must stop and inquire how you and Mrs. Marsh and family and inquiring friends in Hamilton, Toronto and Springville are. I will be in Ottawa later to finish my work. I must thank you for your hospitality while in your home for nearly a month in Hamilton.

(Signed)
J. E. BERNIER,
S.S. "Arctic."

Capt. Bernier is a member of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, and may lecture in Peterborough.

DOMESTIC TAKES CARBOLIC ACID

Cornwall, Oct. 6.—Miss Margaret Levan, aged 22, whose parents reside in Guelph, attempted suicide by carbolic poisoning, and is in a precarious condition in the hospital. She came here some months ago to work in T. Fletcher's home as a domestic. On Monday night the family were away from home and then they returned yesterday at noon, they found the girl in her nightrobe unconscious on her bed.

Miss Levan left a letter to Mrs. Fletcher thanking her for many kindnesses and asking that an enclosed note be sent to her mother. This note expressed regret at her inability to send money as requested and begged forgiveness.

Miss Levan was a well-educated, intelligent girl, whose position was no indication of her attainments.

EARL GREY IS CRITICIZED

Ottawa, Oct. 6.—The Evening Free Press, local Government organ, takes Earl Grey to task for his recent remarks in the West on German war scare and naval situation. It says:

"If our Governors-General are to retain the great respect, which the fact that they are the direct representatives of the King entitles them to, they must keep out of politics. They must shun even an appearance of partizan discussion. We can imagine rumors that would be created among large sections of the people of the British Isles if King Edward were to express such opinions as those uttered by Lord Grey, and why should the Canadian Governor-General go further than the monarch whom he represents would dare to go?"

DISASTER IN B. C. MINES THIRTY MEN ARE DEAD

Nanaimo, B.C., Oct. 6.—Thirty men are now known to be dead as a result of an explosion in No. 2 Mine Extension of the Wellington Colliery Co., 15 miles from here, at 7 a.m. yesterday.

Up to this morning eight bodies had been recovered, namely: T. Thomas, J. Molineaux, Thomas O'Connell, W. Davidson, E. Dunn and one unidentified.

The work of rescue still continues, but it is not expected that any more bodies will be recovered for some hours, as the portion of the mine where the explosion occurred is badly wrecked, the brattice being torn down, and the rescuing parties are very badly hampered by gas.

There were over 50 men entombed, but about 25 were rescued, though all were more or less burned and injured.

The explosion was due to fire damp, the timbers in two levels at once catching fire and spreading with terrible rapidity.

Residents of Nanaimo have been prevented from going to the extension and only rescuers, miners and officials are on the scene.

Only meagre details have filtered out owing to the distance of the mines from lines of communication, but it is known that the entombed men are in a very precarious position.

A miner who reached Ladysmith at noon yesterday from the mine said that as he and his father were leaving the mine; bringing out their gear, an explosion occurred. The shock was terrific. The stoping was blown out and doors unhinged. The effects of the explosion were confined to the slope where it occurred. All the men in other slopes and levels escaped.

FIRES SAID TO HAVE SET HERD OF GOVT. BUFFALO FREE

Calgary, Oct. 6.—That Canada's buffalo park at Wainwright no longer exists, and that the herd of buffalo secured at Pablo, Mont., by the Canadian Government after so much trouble is scattered over the prairie, and being gradually driven northward by prairie fires, is the word brought to Calgary yesterday by a local auctioneer named Edwards.

Prairie fires have been raging in the Wainwright district for nearly a week, and though the fire-fighters were called out in an effort to save the park, they were unsuccessful, and the fencing being destroyed, 800 buffalo and herds of elk were driven out of the park confines and driven northward by the flames. It will be a difficult matter to corral them if they have escaped, as Mr. Edwards reports, as the country offers every facility for them to outwit their pursuers.

The losses sustained by the homesteaders is even greater than at first reported, the fires having swept over a greater distance than was stated.

Hon. Frank Oliver, who is now in the West, will be waited on by a delegation of homesteaders from the affected areas, and asked to give them a further chance to develop their land according to the latest requirements, and also to have his Department furnish them with seed.

THE MINISTERIAL RESOLUTION

There can be no question that the resolution of the Ministerial Association of Peterborough is a timely one. West Peterborough appears to be "rotten to the core" and unless the Government takes hold of it and finds out who and what was, and is wrong, things political and moral will continue to go from bad to worse. It is up to every citizen and every body of citizens having the welfare of the riding at heart to request the Attorney-General by letter to take action. It is upon such representations that governmental action is taken and not otherwise. The political condition of West Peterborough is as a prominent citizen expresses it, simply "horrible" and if the "mystery" is not cleared up it will hang like a pall that cannot be broken, over a struggling, shame-ridden and impotent people.

ANOTHER COMBINE

We used to be told that Protection was the foster-father of trusts, combines, etc. The Toronto Star in a series of articles not long ago showed that the trust and combine method had extended everywhere, and that the masses were the victims even to the most common necessaries of life. Lately there has been formed a huge cement merger which has run up the price of cement about 30 per cent, and the west has begun to howl in a way that makes "the long howl on Unalaska's shore" of Campbell's wolf seem like the piping of frog. Now the steel forces are uniting and the country is to pay the piper accordingly. It is manifest by this time that Liberal politicians, even after 12 years' trial, are just as much the victim's of man's ingenuity as the Conservatives were, if not more so. The moral is that there are no patent ways to repress extortion. The direct method is alone the satisfactory and sufficient one. The industrial struggle seems bound to continue. Meanwhile legitimate industry suffers and the people pay. The power of capital is great and should be tempered by mercy. The spread of socialism is the direct result of the grasping power of capital. The masses seeing that it is impossible to provide safeguards of an indirect and impartial character, propose a direct tax that amounts to confiscation. The result is bound to be disastrous. In England, capital has already taken fright. The withdrawals of money for foreign investment are enormous, and Great Britain is suffering accordingly.

SIR WILFRID ON STUDIES

At a meeting in the city of Quebec Sir Wilfrid is reported to have argued against the continued study of Virgil and Socrates, declaring that the study of the English classics was much preferable to that of the Latin and Greek classics. This is an amazing and disappointing statement. Most readers will remember the great debate on the claims of modern and ancient learning, wherein it was shown to the complete discomfiture of the moderns, that modern literature possessed few, if any, original ideas. It had derived, just as Shakespeare did, its plots and its fancy alike from the ancients. But apart from this fact, why should the genius of an age be left unread because it is locked in an ancient language? That objection would debar us from all those works of more than a few years ago. To leave Socrates and Virgil to the shades of antiquity would be to deprive mankind of half its intellectuality. Socrates means Plato, and Plato, Aristotle. One involves the whole line of Greek philosophers from Anaxagoras or Anaximander, to the last and latest of that princely line. Shall we turn away from the art and genius of Aeschylus and Sophocles, of Demosthenes, of Pindar, of Thucydides, Cicero, Virgil, Livy, etc., merely because they are ancient? Surely we must have some better reason. But there is even more than that—a growing danger of self-centering ourselves in the world of to-day, which is, above all things, a fatal blow to the imagination and, perhaps, to morals as well.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Rural mail delivery is being put in along "the front."

The people of West Peterborough will never be satisfied until the Liberal-Conservative Association Executive and the Liberal Association Executive unite in demanding a Governmental inquiry.

Robert H. Sheppard, who has been arrested on a charge of committing perjury in connection with the West Peterborough election case, is reported as saying that there were other offenders and that the cells will in due time be decorated with them. There were during the trial incidents which suggest that Mr. Sheppard is right as regards there being more than one perjurer in the game. He should be right about their getting into the cells.—Montreal Gazette.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

NORWOOD

Special to the Review.

Norwood, Oct. 5.—The Norwood Presbyterian church was taxed to its fullest capacity on Sunday evening when the pastor, Rev. Geo. A. Maclellan, preached his farewell sermon before leaving for his new field in one of Montreal's most prosperous suburbs. Members from all the different congregations gathered in the spacious auditorium of the church until at seven o'clock fully eight hundred people assembled to hear the last sermon Mr. Maclellan will preach here as pastor of the Presbyterian congregation.

Mr. Maclellan will leave Norwood at noon on Tuesday of this week per C.P.R.

The excavation for the new Union Bank building was commenced on Monday morning of this week. Messrs. Geo. Peters and Henry McLaughlin turned the first sod preparatory to the erection of perhaps the finest bank building in Ontario outside of the large towns.

A firm of Peterborough contractors have the contract for the completion of the building. The work is expected to be finished before Jaunary 1910.

Mr. Richard Lawler, High School principal, has rented Mr. Pearce's commodious house on Ridge street, lately occupied by Mr. John E. Roxburgh and took possession last week.

Dr. Stewart, our much esteemed Peterborough street druggist, has returned after a lengthy visit to Europe and Great Britain. The doctor was highly pleased with his trip and returns brimming over with news and anecdotes from the old land. He brought back with him for his friend, Mr. Fred Anderson, a black thorn stick, a beauty, procured in the "Ould sod."

Mr. H. G. Buck, who is in the west looking after the harvesting and the threshing of the grain from his prairie farm, writes home that the farm will produce this year about 8,500 bushels of wheat together with considerable other grain.

The concert to be given in the town hall on fair night promises to be of unusual interest as the management have provided talent that are sure to make a big hit.

The harvest time has once more come and gone. The grain has been gathered in and at the present time threshing is in full swing. A few words as to the outcome of the summers' labors and the goodness of Providence will be quite in place.

The crops of this locality as a whole are highly satisfactory.

Hay was hardly an avergae crop but there will be plenty to supply the demand. Prices of hay this winter are not likely to be very high at the present time good hay may be had from $12 to $14 per ton.

The majority of the farmers have an excellent crop of fodder corn with a large acerage. Straw will not be in sufficient quantities to be handled carelessly, but most of the farmers will have abundance of coarse feed for their stock without drawing heavily on their supply of hay.

The grain is turning out well, oats will average high while peas and other grains will be nearly up to the average. These facts taken in connection with the prevailing high prices will put the farmer on a good sound financial footing.

The crop of good variety of winter apples is rather short and prices will be fairly high. The quality of the fruit, is however, excellent.

Potatoes are a bumper crop. They are the best in years and the quality is first-class. Shippers could procure almost any quantity of the tubers here with but little effort. At present the prices are at about 40c. per bag.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Ryan visited in Havelock on Tuesday.

Mr. W. Ross, of Havelock, visited Norwood on Sunday.

Mrs. Adams has returned to her home in Smithtown after visiting friends in town.

Mr. S. Hendren and daughter Ruth paid a visit to Peterborough on Saturday.

Mr. J. Hendren was in Peterborough on business on Saturday.

Mr. W. Bisket, who has spent the past few weeks in the States, returned home this week.

Miss Flo Luper, of Donegal, and Mr. Richard Ferguson, of Dummer, were united in marriage on Wednesday evening last.

Mr. Martin Lamey, who is attending High School here, spent Saturday and Sunday at his home in Percy.

The High School Cadet Corps are practicing for drilling at the fair on Wednesday, Oct. 13th.

HAIR SLAUGHTER

Killed by Negligence

Hair must have nourishment or die. If it does not have proper nourishment it will lose its vitality, grow weak, and become an easy prey to the ravages of the vicious and destructive germs of dandruff.

It should be used regularly as a hair dressing by everyone with healthy hair, because it never fails to prevent dandruff, falling hair, or any scalp disease.

But Parisian Sage is not only a preventive it is a certain cure for dandruff; it stops itching of the scalp instantly; it makes hair grow thick and luxuriant. It is especially in demand by ladies, because it makes the hair beautiful, soft and fluffy. Wm. Madill, the druggist, Peterborough, sells it under a positive guarantee to do all that is claimed for it, or money back, 50 cents for a large bottle.

FROZE HER KNEE.

When "Our Own Correspondent" Has Been at Fault.

Lord Lansdowne made use of the present participle "wincing" in a recent speech; but, owing to an outburst of applause, the reporters took it down as "mincing." All, that is, save one, who, not catching the word at all, bravely wrote down "without hesitation" at a venture. Hence a good deal of what the street hawkers call "great fun and amusement."

But Lord Lansdowne is not the only sufferer by mis-reporting, nor is he likely to be the last. Sometimes the mistake is due to defective acoustics, sometimes to the inaudibility of the speaker. And sometimes, but very rarely, the reporter is at fault.

Such a reporter is the hero of a story which the late David Christie Murray was fond of telling. The reporter and Mr. Murray were colleagues on a provincial paper, and the former was sent to "take down"—in the technical term—a well-known local speaker at a political meeting. The orator wound up his speech with the well-known Tennysonian tag:

"Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood.

"The speaker concluded by remarking that, in his opinion, kind hearts were superior to coronets, and there could be no doubt as to the advantage over Norman blood possessed by simple faith."

A few weeks ago Mr. Lewis Harcourt referred in a speech to what he termed "the fiscal juggle." By some means or other the phrase reached the newspapers as "the fiscal gaggle," and for a whole week a controversy raged as to the meaning of the remark. Learned philologists attempted to elucidate the puzzle, which was finally solved by a letter of explanation sent to an evening paper—The Globe—by one of the reporters who was present at the time the speech was delivered.

In the very same week as witnessed the bungle over Lord Lansdowne's speech, no less a person than his great opponent, Mr. Asquith, fell a victim. At the Eighty Club dinner the Premier spoke of "democracy-centred Conservatism," but the lively imagination of one reporter transformed it into "democracy-scented Conservatism."

"Drunkenness is folly!" earnestly exclaimed Bishop Magee in the House of Lords on a celebrated occasion. How horrified was the prelate to read in the papers next morning that he had given utterance to the very Bacchanalian sentiment, "Drunkenness is jolly!" Lord Salisbury was a master phrase-maker; but one of his best points was spoiled when a careless reporter turned his reference to "manacles and Manitoba" into the meaningless "manacles and men at the Bar."

Sir William Harcourt was badly misreported once in an English paper. "Great Diana of the Ephesians!" he exclaimed upon the platform; but a country paper had it, "Great Dinah! What a farce this is!" Lack of knowledge of familiar quotations is a prolific source of misreporting. For instance, a speaker once made use of the well-known lines from Milton's "L'Allegro":

"But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heaven yclept Euphrosyne."

The country reporter deputed to "take him down" was in despair. He could not make head or tail of this mysterious utterance. But, following the sound as far as possible, he seized his pen, and produced the following gem:

"But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heaven she crept, and froze her knee."

The speaker was "taken down" in more senses than one!

Stratford's assessment totals $8,000,000, an increase of $540,956.

$1 a Cake Could Buy No Better Soap

If you were to offer us $1 for a single cake of soap, we could make no better than our Infants' Delight.

For we have put our very best into this cake. We go to the gardens of France for pure vegetable oil. There we pay often double what we might pay. We bring cocoanut oil more than 12,000 miles from the isle of Ceylon. Then we mix these oils and boil them doubly long.

After this we send them through our own special milling process — one that we have perfected only in our 43 years of experience.

From here they fall like flakes of snow into huge bins and are then crushed under a weight of 30 tons to press out the moisture.

Then they pass through granite rollers and come out in miles of silky ribbons, after which they are dried eight times. The result is the most perfect and delightful soap.

It is so pure and clean that it leaves the skin fair as an infant's. So we call this soap Infants' Delight.

Order one cake today and see for yourself how different it is. Note the rich, creamy lather and see how it leaves the skin as soft as velvet and as smooth as silk.

Note the dainty perfume — it comes from Bulgaria and costs us $100 a pound. But it requires 3,000 pounds of rose leaves to make a single ounce of this Otto of Roses. The fragrance is simply exquisite. Please try it and see.

How to Manicure

File your nails to the desired length. Then soak them in warm water with a thick lather of Infants' Delight. Remove your fingers from the water and push back the cuticle at the base of the nails until the white crescent appears. After this, trim and polish the nails as usual.

COMMITTEE ON APPOINTMENT.

To the Chairman and Members of the Board of Education:

Gentlemen.—Your Committee on Appointments beg leave to report and recommend as follows—

As instructed, you committee advertised for an additional teacher for the Collegiate Institute staff, and received 34 applications, but do not think any of the applicants are sufficiently well qualified, and recommend that Miss Muriel Fessenden be appointed for the balance of this term, viz., October 1st to December 31st, at the rate of 1,100 per annum, and would ask that your committee be authorized to advertise immediately for a male teacher, duties to start January 1st next.

The resignation of Miss Davidson from the Kindergarten staff necessitated the engaging of a teacher to fill the vacancy. It was considered by your committee that Miss Ada Gillespie, of the Queen Alexandra staff, a duly qualified directress and successful teacher, should be promoted to take charge of a class. This left the directress of the Queen Alexandra Kindergarten without an assistant. Owing to this being the only Kindergarten room where the Normal students observe the instruction, it was considered necessary to secure a fully qualified directress to do the work heretofore performed by Miss Gillespie.

For this position your committee received eight applications, and after careful consideration recommend that Miss Mary Burgess, of London, be appointed to the position of assistant kindergarten directress of the Queen Alexandra school at a fixed salary of $400 per annum. This is $100 more than was paid Miss Gillespie, but as this extra amount had to be paid to secure a teacher capable of taking up work with the Normal students, your committee feels that this Board should continue to pay but $300 of the salary, and that the remaining $100 be taken from the Government grant of $2,250 for extra remuneration of teachers in connection with the Normal Training Schools. These changes will not increase the expense to the Board, and the Kindergarten classes will be presided over by a capable staff of teachers. The classes will be in charge of the following teachers:

Queen Alexandra—Miss Warner and Miss Burgess.

Central and King Edward — Miss Denne and Miss Cameron.

South Central and East City—Miss Buch and Miss A. Gillespie.

Respectfully submitted.

W. H. HILL,
Chairman.

SUPERVISION CMMITTEE.

Chairman and Members, Peterborough Board of Education, Peterborough, Ont.:

Gentlemen,—Your Supervision Committee beg to report as follows:—

In view of the fact that the Government regulations regarding Collegiate Institutes call for a "satisfactory gymnasium, failing which the school shall forfeit its status" your committee have entered into negotiations with the Y.M.C.A. for the services of their physical instructor and use of the equipment and gymnasium of the association for a period of five months —from November 1st, 1909, to March 31st, 1910. The cost to the Board will be $150, being half salary of the instructor. This your committee fees, should meet the requirements for the present.

The overcrowding of the lower forms in the institute referred to in the principal's communication of the 7th Sept., has been to some extent relieved by the opening of another room. The Property Committee has utilized seats already on hand and the room was occupied on the 1st October.

Your committee recommend that the usual grant of $25 be made to the school sports.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN CRANE,
Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Crane and Dr. Burnham, the report was adopted.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Clarice I. Davidson, asking on behalf of the Peterborough branch of the Woman's Art Association, that the use of the Collegiate hall be given free of charge to allow the Association to hold a lecture in the near future.

On motion of Messrs. Dumble and Hill the matter was referred to the Supervision Committee to arrange the details, with the understanding that the Board granted the request.

From Miss M. Fessenden, accepting a position on the teaching staff of the Collegiate for the balance of the term.—Received.

From Miss Burgess, accepting a position on the teaching staff of the Public schools.—Received.

From Miss S. J. Davidson, resigning her position as kindergarten directress of the South Central school.—Accepted.

From John Hart, caretaker at the Collegiate Institute, asking for a raise in salary of $50.00, giving as his reason that a new room had been opened up. He stated that the raise should be given in accordance with the schedule. He also asked $1.50 for brooms.

On motion of Messrs. Crane and Hill, the secretary will comply with his demand.

From A. Mowat, giving statement of duties performed by Mr. Simpson, caretaker at the Central school, and which includes an extra room, that he has not been paid for.

On motion the secretary was ordered to pay Mr. Simpson for the extra room.

From A. Mowat asking that the sum of 1.00 be refunded to Gordon Campbell, who paid the fee of $2.00 at the recent departmental examinations and did not write.

On motion of Messrs. Crane and Mason, the money will be refunded.

From the Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company, giving statement in regard to the inspection of the boiler at the Central school.—Received.

From A. N. Scarrow, asking for leave of absence to attend the Teachers' Institute meetings at Belleville. —Granted.

From John J. Howden, who complains that he did not receive any part of the contract for supplying the wood at the East Ward school.—Received.

The text books, as set out in the letter from the Principal of the Collegiate Institute, were authorized to be used in the Institute on motion of Messrs. Dr. Burnham and Nelson.

It was moved by Mr. Hill, and seconded by Dr. Burnham, that the chairman and secretary be instructed to prepare a letter of recommendation for Miss Davidson from this board.—Carried.

Inspector A. Mowat said that so far this year he has been troubled considerably by county pupils. He said that south of the race track a large number of people were living and they wanted to get their children into the city schools as city pupils. According to the regulations this could not be allowed.

The Board could not see its way clear to reduce or do away with the fees. The members thought the best thing for the people to do was to get into the city. They should either move in or petition the council to annex that territory.

FOR THE LADY WHO CALLS

The lady who has a large circle of acquaintances always finds it a difficult matter to keep track of the reception days of her friends and often mistakes are made, that might have been avoided if care were taken to make a record of such days. And then there are the teas, at homes, and parties to be remembered too and when a hostess is planning an affair, she is always worried lest she overlook some one who has extended hospitality to her some time previous. To avoid these mistakes, a social register has been issued by the Review, that will be a boon to the busy lady. There are pages for each day of the month on which the record of the calls received and paid with the address of the visitor appear, then there are pages for social engagements, visits paid, addresses and memoranda, all of which prove very valuable data to have. These books are on sale at all the book stores and at the Review Office for 50 cents and there has already been a good demand for them.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, Oct. 5.—Receipts of live stock at the city market, as reported by the railways, were 103 carloads, consisting of 1520 cattle, 2572 hogs, 2516 sheep and lambs and 167 calves.

Butchers.

Geo. Rowntree was the heaviest buyer of fat cattle, having bought 430 for the Harris Abattoir Company at following prices: Butchers' steers and heifers, at from $4 to $4.90; cows, $1.50 to $4.20, bulls, $2.40 to $4.

One lot of eight of the best butchers' cattle on the market, 1000 lbs. each, sold at $5.10 per cwt. We only heard of 42 cattle out of the 1520 reported that sold at $5 and over. One load of 28, weighing 1150 lbs. each, was sold by Maybee & Wilson at $5.10.

Stockers and Feeders.

Harry Murby reports good quality steers, 900 to 1050 lbs. each, as being firm, but light cattle, from 500 to 700 lbs. each, as being easier. Mr. Murby bought over 150 cattle to-day at following prices: Best steers, 900 to 1050 lbs. each, at $4 to $4.50; best steers, 800 to 900 lbs. each, at $3.50 to $3.85; good stockers, 500 to 700 lbs. each, at $2.75 to $3.25, common stockers, $2 to $2.25.

Milkers and Springers

There was a fair to strong demand for milkers, as Napoleon Daniel of Montreal was on the market again this morning, as well as many farmers and dairymen, looking for good quality cows. Prices were reported steady, at $35 to $65, but few reached the latter price. Dunn & Levack sold one at $65.

Veal Calves.

There was a strong market for veal calves at prices ranging from $3 to $7 per cwt; but there were few that reached the latter figure. The quality of a large number of the calves was anything but good, and certainly did the farmer no credit that raised them.

Sheep and Lambs.

There was a fair demand for sheep and lambs at slightly firmer prices. Export ewes were quoted at $3.50 to $3.85, and a few at $4 per cwt.; rams, $2 to $3 per cwt.; lambs at $5.50 to $5.75 per cwt.; select lots of ewes and wethers brought as high as $5.80 to $5.85.

Hogs.

The World's quotations for Monday's market at the Junction proved to be the nearest to the mark, as dealers were paying $8 for selects, fed and watered, and $7.75 f.o.b. cars at country points. This is a drop of 25c per cwt. since last week.

Pittsburg, Oct. 6.—Mrs. H. Robinson Rea, wife of the wealthy oil operator, has been robbed of $100,000 in jewels, and family heirlooms, and neighborhood gossip attributes the theft to a German nobleman who was employed in the summer home of the Reas as major-domo, and disappeared about a month ago.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kink in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

THE PROPOSED RAILWAY

The C.P.'s Georgian Bay and Seaboard Railway enters the city through Jackson Park, crossing Smith street a little below the old quarry hill, and then gradually turns up towards the Monaghan road, which it crosses at Weller street, continuing on through the lower part of Mr. Hatton's grounds, the T. E. Bradburn property, the Waddell property and Byersville, gradually curving to where it joins the main line, about the junction of Chamberlain and Lafayette streets.

The land asked by the C. P.'s Georgian Bay and Seaboard Railway along the river is set out on their map fyled in the city offices, and is comprised within a red line that runs easterly on Sherbrooke street from Water street out to the limit of the water-lots extending into the river outside of the present C. P. R. spur-line, thence north-easterly to a little beyond what would be Simcoe street, if extended into the river, and reaching to within a short distance of the Hunter street bridge, thence south-easterly to Water street, opposite Charlotte street and thence southerly along Water street to the point of beginning, at Sherbrooke street and Water street corner, save and excepting the lots within the prescribed area fronting Water street, now owned by private parties, and possibly some government reservations lower down along the newly-made land. This area would provide yard-room and siding-room for, say, five or six tracks. It would relieve the city of further interest in that area which may be briefly described as lying south of the Hunter street bridge and extending from the river to Water street.

The western part of the city will suffer in appearance from the incoming of the railway. Hickeyville and Byersville will be on the through route. The "residential" part of the city will change. With regard to the flats below the market, it had been hoped that someday the market would be moved down there and the present valuable site made a source of revenue for the city. However, it is all a matter for careful consideration and after all citizens may have to expand their views to meet developments as yet unforseen.

J. A. SEXSMITH M.P. BACK FROM COAST

Mr. Sexsmith returned a few days ago from the west. He went in all directions throughout the prairie country, and thinks well of it. There is a very large foreign European population, and the influx from the U. S. is also great. B.C. as a farming country does not equal expectations, he thinks. The farmer, young or old, who is doing well in Ontario is much more comfortable and possibly happier than in the great new country, but for a young man without resources the west, he says, is the place. Increased values in the west lead people on to speculation. The reproductive power of the prairie is wonderful. The climate is good. It is clear and healthy, and not so inclement as usually described. Vancouver is growing at the rate of 5,000 per month. The Canadian exhibit of general resources at the Seattle Exhibition was magnificent. The Toronto Exhibition, however, is a larger affair.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

The fourth annual 'Round the Mountain race of the Montreal Herald is announced for Thanksgiving Day, Oct. 25. This race was the first big harrier event to be instituted in Montreal, and immediately "caught on" after its introduction. The first race saw what was then considered to be a good field of entries made for the second race, the following year, not a quarter of the entries made for the race of 1908. The indications are that the race of 1909 will surpass each of these.

The course is about ten miles in length and lies completely round the base of Mount Royal, the mountain that lies behind the city of Montreal. The start takes place from in front of the Herald office in Victoria Square and the finish takes place in the same place.

The course is full of variety and this probably tends to make the race the popular event it is. All varieties of going are met on the way from the hard-paving of the city streets to the soft, springy turf that lines the country roads. The course also is in places, hilly, but for every up hill pull, there is, of course, a corresponding down grade so that the most exacting could hardly complain of monotony.

The initial race, that of 1906, was won by Tom Shipman, of the Gordon Harriers, of Montreal, in 59.53 secs, and the following year was carried off by Abbie Wood, also of the Gordon Harriers, who cut down Shipman's time by nine seconds. Abbie Wood later on joined the professional ranks, winning the Victoria Day Marathon in Montreal this year, running second in the All Canadian Marathon Derby in Toronto and winning many other races between fifteen miles and the full Marathon distance.

The race of 1908 was captured by Paddy Royal, of the M.A.A.A., who again clipped the record, winning in 58.25. Royal ran third in the race of 1907.

SMASHED THREE SCHOOL RECORDS IN COLLEGIATE SPORTS AT RIVERSIDE

The outstanding feature of the Collegiate sports yesterday afternoon at Riverside Park was the splendid performance of Michael O'Brien, who succeeded in establishing three school records. He made a new mark in each of the following events, running broad jump, standing hop, step and jump, and running hop, step and jump.

The work of the juniors was also interesting and good showings were made. No records were established, however.

CELEBRATED GOLDEN WEDDING ON TUESDAY AFTERNOON

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Matthews, of Lindsay, Have Been Married Fifty Years—Banquet at Hotel Benson—All the Family Present.

Lindsay, Oct. 6.—Fifty years ago today George Matthews and Ann Smithson were married in South Monaghan township, Peterborough county; to-day the sons and daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, and their children, celebrated the golden anniversary of that happy event, assembling from far and wide for the purpose.

Mr. Matthews is one of the foremost of Lindsay citizens and he has been associated with the town's growth for many years. He is the head of the George Matthews Company, Limited, a firm with factories in Peterborough, Ottawa, Hull and Brantford. Mr. and Mrs. Matthews have, since their residence in town, been two of Lindsay's most estimable residents.

BANQUET AT HOTEL BENSON.

The sons and daughters and grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Matthews assembled for dinner at the Benson House this afternoon at half-past two o'clock, and a very pleasant time was spent. The dining-room of that hotel was beautifully decorated. The color scheme was russet, brown and the pervading tints of autumn, and branches of maples with the leaves in the gorgeous autumn tints, combined with the other decorations delightfully.

Mine Host Burgess had made full preparations for the events and nothing had been overlooked, the guests being looked after most attentively and the dinner being a most sumptuous affair.

THE TOAST MASTER.

Mr. T. F. Matthews, of Peterborough, was the toast master for the occasion, and after dinner had been served a toast list was honored.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Matthews received many gifts from their children, all expressive of the universal joy at the occasion of the re-union.

SOLID GOLD SPOONS.

To each one present Mr. Geo. Matthews presented a solid gold spoon engraved with the initials of himself and wife, and with the date of their marriage and the present occasion of their golden wedding.

THOSE PRESENT.

The ten children of Mr. and Mrs. Matthews, four daughters and six sons, and their children, all of whom were here for the auspicious occasion, are as follows, with their place of residence;

George Matthews and Ann Smithson Matthews, parents.

Frances Matthews Wolverton, (daughter), her husband, Newton Wolverton, and children Dora Anne, Jasper Matthews, Frances, Elisabeth and Alice, of Nelson, B.C.

William Ezra Matthews, (son) and wife Fanny Ward Matthews, and children Samuel George, William Montague and Dorothy Beatrice, of Ottawa.

Elizabeth Matthews Ryley, (daughter) and husband, John Proud Ryley, and children, George Alfred and Isabel Matthews, of Lindsay.

Thomas Francis Matthews (son) and wife Ella Stratton Matthews, and children, Harold Stratton, Gordon Smithson, Jessie, James and Herbert, of Peterborough.

Albert Edward Matthews (son) and wife, Maud Whiteside Matthews and children Grace Elisabeth, Paul Whiteside and Albert Bruce, of Ottawa.

Alfred Joseph Matthews (son) and wife, Jean Gross Matthews, and daughter Jean Isabel, of Halifax, N.S.

Alice Maud Mary Matthews, at home.

BORN IN ENGLAND.

Mr. George Matthews, the head of the family, was born in Birmingham, England, seventy-five years ago. His ascent from an ordinary farmer to the head of a big industry has been achieved through ability of no mean level.

When but a young man Mr. Matthews came to Canada. In South Monaghan township he settled as a farmer, pioneering the land himself. His marriage to Ann Smithson, the fiftieth event of which was celebrated to-day took place in the year 1859.

MOVED TO LINDSAY.

Shortly after his marriage he moved to Lindsay where he conducted a provision store which was among the earliest in this town. This store was destroyed by the big fire which laid waste the town in its early history.

Then Mr. and Mrs. Matthews went to Oshawa for a year or so, Mr. Matthews conducting a general business in that town. On his return to Lindsay he was given the position of superintendent of the packing house of, C. L. Baker. This packing house was acquired by him in 1873, and from then Mr. Matthew's rise in the world was rapid.

A few years later a packing house was built in Peterborough and afterwards another in Ottawa. The factory here was closed down in 1897. Previous to this the business had been formed into a limited liability company.

BRANCHING OUT.

Another branch was added to the firm in 1903 when the business of the Brantford Packing Co. was taken over. The three establishments are are now being operated by the one company. Sons of Mr. Matthews are jointly in charge of the establishment at Ottawa, and Geo. S. Matthews at Brantford.

The history of the rise of the company fits closely into the life of the man whose golden wedding was celebrated to-day. Its success was his success.

AN ADDRESS.

The congregation of the Baptist church took advantage of the occasion to present the following address to Mr. and Mrs. Matthews:

To Mr. and Mrs. Matthews:—

Dear Friends.—We your sons and daughters and immediate friends, are congratulating you and rejoicing together in the celebration of your golden wedding anniversary, we, the fellow members of the Lindsay Baptist church gladly avail ourselves of the opportunity to express in this way our feelings of joy and thankfulness that our Heavenly Father has, in His goodness and wisdom spared you so long and enabled you to meet an unbroken family on this happy occasion.

Your earnest and useful lives have been an inspiration to us, and your quiet consistent walk in the Christian life has been a continual benediction.

We join earnestly and affectionately in all the congratulations that are now being so freely extended to you, and our earnest prayer is that you may be long spared to us and to all who hold you in their most cherished affections, and that these later mellowing years may bring you an even larger measure of the choicest of divine blessings.

Lindsay, Oct. 5th, 1909.

FOOTBALL

Special to the Review.

Havelock, Oct. 5.—The Havelock football team got a good practice on Saturday last, when they met the Bethany eleven at the park here, the game resulting in a score of 1—0, the same story as when they went to Bethany on Labor Day. The game started at 1.30 p.m. with a very bad wind that was responsible for some bad passing during the first part of the game. Bethany started out with the wind in their favor as if they meant business, and although they done some pretty work, they could not locate the stakes. The Havelock tea, although they have had very little practice lately, played a nice, even game as usual. Shortly before half time Havelock succeeded in scoring the only goal of the game. Mr. H. Meade, of town, made a satisfactory referee. The following was the line-up of the Havelock team;—

Goal—W. J. Rose.
Backs—H. Andrews, F. McKay.
Halves—W. Hitchins, H. Kindred, W. McMullon.
Centre—Wm. Rose.

GOING TO BRUSSELS.

The first game in the finals for the provincial championship will take place at Brussels on Friday afternoon and the locals will go up with their best line-up. Brussels will play the return game some day next week, the exact date not have been set. The local team will leave here on Thursday afternoon in order to catch the morning train for Brussels, which is situated about 180 miles north-west of Toronto.

NOTES OF THE DAY

Rejected Lover Suicides.

St. Mary's, Oct. 6.—Shortly after Robt. Butcher, employed on J. Lammund's farm, two miles south of here, had received a letter from a young woman of this town, indicating her preference for a young man in the old country, he went to the back bush and hanged himself. He was observed coming from the barn with a rope Monday afternoon and the body was found yesterday. He was 22 years old.

Murder Suspects Arrested.

Montreal, Oct. 6. The murder of Tony Pucci, an Italian, on Sept. 28, 1906, in a house on Chatham street, was recalled yesterday by the arrest of two Italians, Longo and Russo. An Italian woman named Anente, who was in the house at the time of the murder, gave the police information which resulted in the arrests.

Try to Smuggle In Opium.

Public meetings will be arranged for that day, including service in two of the churches and mass meetings in the Opera House in the afternoon and evening. The work of Rev. Dr. Crafts is to fight the big four evils, viz:

Mr. F. Mason's floral window is just now dressed with an extensive display of imported Holland bulbs. The big shipment which annually arrives from Europe, reached this firm lately in fine condition. Queen Charlotte Island

One result of the development at Prince Rupert and the territory tributary to the new port has been the formation of a million-dollar syndicate headed by Mr. J. A. Moore, of Seattle, and which includes the Rev. Dr. Hillis of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, to develop the resources of Queen Charlotte Island. The syndicate controls 20,500 acres of timber. The intention is to build as rapidly as possible seventeen miles of standard guage railway to bring out the native resources of the island. A bridge will carry the line over to Lena Island, where wharfs and bunkers will be built. In addition to the timber wealth, which is really a secondary consideration, valuable gold veins are said to underlie the surface of the island.

THE YOUNGER SET

Author of
"The Fighting Chance."

"Because," she said, "you are so unconscious of your own value I like you best, I think. I never before quite realized just what it was in you."

"My value," he said, "is what you care to make it."

"Then nobody can afford to take you away from me, Captain Selwyn."

He flushed with pleasure. "That is the prettiest thing a woman ever admitted to a man," he said.

"What more is there than our confidence in each other and our content?" she said.

And, as he did not respond: "I wonder if you realize how perfectly lovely you have been to me since you have come into my life. Do you? Do you remember the first day—the very first—how I sent word to you that I wished you to see my first real dinner gown? Smile if you wish—ah, but you don't! You don't understand, my poor friend, how much you became to me in that little interview! Men's kindness is a strange thing. They may try and try, and a girl may know they are trying and, in her turn, try to be grateful, but it is all effort on both sides. Then, with a word, an impulse born of chance or instinct, a man may say and do that which a woman can never forget and would not if she could."

"Have I done that?"

"Yes. Didn't you understand? Do you suppose any other man in the world could have what you have had of me—of my real self? Do you suppose for one instant that any other man than you could ever obtain from me the confidence I offer you unasked? Do I not tell you everything that enters my head and heart? Do you not know that I care for you more than for anybody alive?"

"Gerald!"

She looked him straight in the eyes; her breath caught, but she steadied her voice.

"I've got to be truthful," she said. "I care for you more than for Gerald."

"And I for you more than anybody living," he said.

"Is it true?"

"It is the truth, Eileen."

"You—you make me very happy, Captain Selwyn."

"But did you not know it before I told you?"

"I—y-yes; I hoped so." In the exultant reaction from the delicious tension of avowal she laughed lightly, not knowing why.

"The pleasure in it," she said, "is the certainty that I am capable of making you happy. You have no idea how I desire to do it. I've wanted to ever since I knew you—I've wanted to be capable of doing it. And you tell me that I do, and I am utterly and foolishly happy." The quick, mischievous sparkle flashed up, transforming her for an instant. "Ah, yes, and I can make you unhappy, too, it seems, by talking of marriage. That, too, is something—a delightful power—but"—the malice dying to a spark in her brilliant eyes—"I shall not torment you, Captain Selwyn. Will it make you happier if I say, 'No; I shall never marry as long as I have you?' Will it really? Then I say it. Never, never will I marry as long as I have your confidence and friendship. But I want it all—every bit, please. And if ever there is another woman—if ever you fall in love—crack—away I go"—she snapped her white fingers—"like that," she added, "only quicker. Well, then, be very, very careful, my friend. I wish there were some place here where I could curl up indefinitely and listen to your views on life. You brought a book to read, didn't you?"

He gave her a funny, embarrassed glance. "Yes; I brought a sort of book."

"Then I'm all ready to be read to, thank you. Please steady me while I try to stand up on this log. One hand will do."

Scarcely in contact with him she crossed the log, sprang blithely to the ground and, lifting the hem of her summer gown an inch or two, picked her way toward the bank above.

"We can see Nina when she signals us from the lawn to come to luncheon," she said, gazing out across the upland toward the silvery tinted hillside where Silverside stood, every pane glittering with the white eastern sunlight.

In the dry, sweet grass she found a place for a nest and settled into it, head prone on a heap of scented bay leaves, elbows skyward and fingers linked across her chin.

"What book did you bring?" she asked dreamily.

He turned red. "It's—it's just a chapter from a little book I'm trying to write—a—a sort of suggestion for the establishment of native regiments in the Philippines. I thought, perhaps, you might not mind listening"—

He wrote simply and without self consciousness. Loyalty aroused her interest, intelligence sustained it, and when the end came it came too quickly for her, and she said so frankly, which delighted him.

"Hark! Ear to the ground! My atavistic and wilder instincts warn me that somebody is coming!" she said.

"Boots and Drina," said Selwyn, and he hailed them as they came into view above. Then he sprang to his feet, calling out: "And Gerald too! Hello, old fellow! This is perfectly fine! When did you arrive?"

"Oh, Gerald," cried Eileen, both hands outstretched, "it's splendid of you to come! Dear fellow, have you seen Nina and Austin? And were they not delighted? And you've come to stay, haven't you? There, I won't begin to urge you. Look, Gerald—look, Boots—and Drina, too—only look at those beautiful big plump trout in Captain Selwyn's creel!"

"Oh, I say," exclaimed Gerald, "you didn't take those in that little brook, did you, Philip? Well, wouldn't that snare you! I'm coming down here after luncheon. I sure am."

"You will, too, won't you?" asked Drina, jealous lest Boots, her idol, miss his due share of piscatorial glory. "If you'll wait until I finish my French I'll come with you."

"Of course I will," said Lansing reproachfully. "You don't suppose there's any fun anywhere for me without you do you?"

"No," said Drina simply, "I don't."

Selwyn turned to Gerald. "I hunted high and low for you before I came to Silverside. You found my note?"

"Yes: I—I'll explain later," said the boy, coloring. "Come ahead, Lily, Boots and I will take you on at tennis—and Philip too. We've an hour or so before luncheon. Is it a go?"

"Certainly," replied his sister, unaware of Selwyn's proficiency, but loyal even in doubt. And the five, walking abreast, moved off across the uplands toward the green lawn of Silverside, where, under a gay fawn parasol, Nina sat, a "nature book" in hand, the center of an attentive gathering composed of dogs, children and the cat, Kit-Ki, blinking her topaz tinted eyes in the sunshine.

The young mother looked up happily as the quintet came strolling across the lawn. "Please don't wander away again before luncheon," she said. "Gerald, I suppose you are starved, but you've only an hour to wait. Oh, Phil, what wonderful trout! Children, kindly arise and admire the surpassing skill of your frivolous uncle!" And as the children and dogs came crowding around the opened fish basket she said to her brother in a low, contented voice: "Gerald has quite made it up with Austin, dear. I think we have to thank you, haven't we?"

"Has he really squared matters with Austin? That's good; that's fine! Oh, no, I had nothing to do with it—practically nothing. The boy is sound at the core—that's what did it." And to Gerald, who was hailing him from the veranda: "Yes, I've plenty of tennis shoes. Help yourself, old chap."

Eileen had gone to her room to don a shorter skirt and rubber soled shoes. Lansing followed her example, and Selwyn, entering his own room, found Gerald trying on a pair of white footgear.

The boy looked up, smiled and, crossing one knee, began to tie the laces.

"I told Austin that I meant to slow down," he said. "We're on terms again. He was fairly decent."

"Good business!" commented Selwyn vigorously.

"And I'm cutting out cards and cocktails," continued the boy, eager as a little lad who tells how good he has been all day. "I made it plain to the fellows that there was nothing in it for me. And, Philip, I'm boning down like thunder at the office. I'm horribly in debt, and I'm hustling to pay up and make a clean start. You," he added, coloring, "will come first."

"At your convenience," said Selwyn, smiling.

"Not at all! Yours is the first account to be squared, then Neergard."

"Do you owe him, Gerald?"

"Do I? O Lord! But he's a patient soul. Really, Philip, I wish you didn't dislike him so thoroughly, because he's good company, and, besides that, he's a very able man. Well, we won't talk about him, then. Come on. I'll lick the very life out of you over the net!"

A few moments later the white balls were flying over the white net and active white flanneled figures were moving swiftly over the velvet turf.

Drina, aloft on the umpire's perch, calmly scored and decided each point impartially, though her little heart was beating fast in desire for the supremacy of Boots, and it was all her official composure could endure to see how Eileen at the net beat down his defense, driving him with her volleys to the service line.

Chapter 18

DRINA'S relations with Lansing afforded infinite amusement to the Gerards. It had been a desperate case from the very first, and the child took it so seriously and considered her claim on Boots so absolute that neither that young man nor anybody else dared make a jest of the affair within her hearing.

Otherwise she was the same active, sociable, wholesome, intelligent child, charmingly casual and inconsistent, and the list of her youthful admirers at dancing school and parties required the alphabetical classification of Mr. Lansing.

But Boots was her own particular possession. He was her chattel, her thing, and he and other people knew that it was no light affair to meddle with the personal property of Drina Gerard.

Eileen, one bare arm around her brother's shoulders, strolled houseward across the lawn, switching the shaven sod with her tennis bat.

"What are you doing this afternoon?" she said to Selwyn. "Gerald"—she touched her brother's smooth cheek—"means to fish. Boots and Drina are keen on it, too, and Nina is driving to Wyossett with the children."

"And you?" he asked, smiling.

"Whatever you wish," confident that he wanted her, whatever he had on hand.

"I ought to walk over to Storm head," he said, "and get things straightened out."

"Your laboratory?" asked Gerald. "Austin told me when I saw him in town that you were going to have the cottage on Storm head to make powder in."

"Only in minute quantities, Gerald," explained Selwyn. "I just want to try a few things. And if they turn out all right what do you say to taking a look in—if Austin approves?"

"Oh, please, Gerald," whispered his sister.

"Do you really believe there is anything in it?" asked the boy. "Because, if you are sure"—

"There certainly is if I can prove that my powder is able to resist heat, cold and moisture. The Lawn people stand ready to talk matters over as soon as I am satisfied. There's plenty of time, but keep the suggestion in the back of your head, Gerald."

The boy smiled, nodded importantly and went off to remove the stains of tennis from his person, and Eileen went, too, turning around to look back at Selwyn.

"Thank you for asking Gerald! I'm sure he will love to go into anything you think safe."

"Will you join us, too?" he called back smilingly. "We may need capital!"

"I'll remember that!" she said, and, turning once more as she reached the landing, "Goodby—until luncheon!" and touched her lips with the tips of her fingers, flinging him a gay salute.

In parting and meeting, even after the briefest of intervals, it was always the same with her; always she had for him some informal hint of the formality of parting, always some recognition of their meeting—in the light touching of hands as though the symbol of ceremony at least was due to him, to herself and to the occasion.

At luncheon Nina and Eileen talked garden talk—they both were quite mad about their fruit trees and flower beds. Selwyn, Gerald and Boots discussed stables, golf links and finally the new business which Selwyn hoped to develop.

Afterward, when the children had been excused and Drina had pulled her chair close to Lansing's to listen—and after that, on the veranda, when the men sat smoking and Drina was talking French and Nina and Eileen had gone off with baskets, trowels and pruning shears—Selwyn still continued in conference with Boots and Gerald, and it was plain that his concise, modest explanation of what he had accomplished in his experiments with chaosite seriously impressed the other men.

Boots frankly admitted it. "Besides," he said, "if the Lawn people are so anxious for you to give them first say in the matter I don't see why we shouldn't have faith in it—enough, I mean, to be good to ourselves by offering to be good to you, Phil."

"Wait until Austin comes down—and until I've tried one or two new ideas," said Selwyn. "Nothing on earth would finish me quicker than to get anybody who trusted me into a worthless thing."

"It's plain," observed Boots, "that although you may have been an army captain you're no captain of industry—you're not even a noncom.!"

Selwyn laughed. "Do you really believe that ordinary decency is uncommon?"

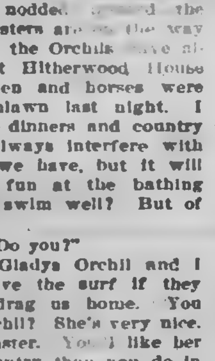
"Look at Long Island," returned Boots. "Where does the boom of worthless acreage and paper cities land investors when it explodes?"

Gerald had flushed up at the turn in the conversation, and Selwyn steered Lansing into other and safer channels until Gerald went away to find a rod.

And, as Drina had finished her French lesson, she and Lansing presently departed, brandishing fishing rods adorned with the gaudiest of flies.

* * * * * * *

In the rose garden and along that section of the wall included in it the rich, dry, porous soil glimmered like gold under the sun, and here Selwyn discovered Nina and Eileen busily solicitous over the tender shoots of favorite bushes. A few long stemmed early rosebuds lay in their baskets. Selwyn drew one through his buttonhole and sat down on a wheelbarrow, amiably disposed to look on and let the others work.



In the rose garden.

"Not much!" said Nina. "You can start in and 'pinch back' this prairie climber—do you hear, Phil? I won't let you dawdle around and yawn while I'm pricking my fingers every instant! Make him move, Eileen."

Eileen came over to him, fingers doubled into her palm and small thumb extended.

"Thorns and prickles, please," she said, and he took her hand in his and proceeded to extract them while she looked down at her almost invisible wounds, tenderly amused at his fear of hurting her.

"Do you know," she said, "that people are beginning to open their houses yonder?" She nodded toward the west. "The Minsters are on the way to Brookminster, the Orchils have already arrived at Hitherwood House and the coachmen and horses were housed at Southlawn last night. I rather dread the dinners and country formality that always interfere with the jolly times we have, but it will be rather good fun at the bathing beach. Do you swim well? But of course you do."

"Pretty well. Do you?"

"I'm a fish. Gladys Orchil and I would never leave the surf if they didn't literally drag us home. You know Gladys Orchil? She's very nice, so is Sheila Minster. You'll like her better in the country than you do in town. Kathleen Lawn is nice too. Alas! I see many a morning where Drina and I twirl our respective thumbs while you and Boots are off with a gayer set.

"Oh, don't interrupt! No mortal man is proof against Sheila and Gladys and Kathleen, and you're not a demigod, are you? Thank you for your surgery upon my thumb." She naively placed the tip of it between her lips and looked at him, standing there like a schoolgirl in her fresh gown, burnished hair loosened and curling in riotous beauty across cheeks and ears.

He had seated himself on the wheelbarrow again. She stood looking down at him, hands now bracketed on her narrow hips, so close that the fresh fragrance of her grew faintly perceptible, a delicate atmosphere of youth mingling with the perfume of the young garden.

Nina, basket on her arm, snipping away with her garden shears, glanced over her shoulder—and went on snipping. They did not notice how far away her agricultural ardor led her—did not notice when she stood a moment at the gate looking back at them or when she passed out, pretty head bent thoughtfully, the shears swinging loose at her girdle.

"You are very like a boy sometimes," said Eileen—"as young as Gerald, I often think, especially when your hat is off. You always look so perfectly groomed. I wonder—I wonder what you would look like if your hair were rumpled."

"Try it," he suggested lazily.

"I? I don't think I dare." She raised her hand, hesitated, the gay daring in her eyes deepening to audacity. "Shall I?"

"Why not?"

"T-touch your hair—rumple it, as I would Gerald's? I'm tempted to—only—only"—

"What?"

"I don't know. I couldn't. I—it was only the temptation of a second." She laughed uncertainly. The suggestion of the intimacy tinted her cheeks with its reaction. She took a short step backward. Instinct, blindly stirring, sobered her, and as the smile faded from eye and lip his face changed too. And far, very far away in the silent cells of his heart a distant pulse awoke.

"Have you misunderstood me?" she asked in a low voice.

"How, child?"

"I don't know. Shall we walk a little?"

When they came to the water lily pond she seated herself for a moment on a marble bench, then, curiously restless, rose again, and again they moved forward at hazard, past the spouting fountain, which was a driven well, out of which a crystal column of water rose geyser-like, dazzling in the westering sun rays.

"Nina tells me that this water rises in the Connecticut hills," he said, "and flows as a subterranean sheet under the sound, spouting up here on Long Island when you drive a well."

They moved on, the girl curiously reserved, noncommunicative, head slightly lowered, the man vague eyed, thoughtful, pacing slowly at her side. Behind them their long shadows trailed across the brilliant grass.

Traversing the grove which encircled the newly clipped lawn, now fragrant with sun crisped grass tips left in the wake of the mower, he mentioned moonlight.

She glanced up, then away from him.

"You seem to be enamored of the moonlight," she said.

"I like to prowl in it."

"Alone?"

"Sometimes."

"And at other times?"

He laughed. "Oh, I'm past the spooning age. Are you glad?"

She halted. "Yes, because I'm quite sure of you if you are; I mean that I can always keep you for myself. Can't I?"

She was smiling, and her eyes were clear and fearless, but there was a wild rose tint on her cheeks which deepened a little as he turned short in his tracks, gazing straight at her.

"You wish to keep me—for yourself?" he repeated, laughing.

"Yes, Captain Selwyn."

"Until you marry—is that it, Eileen?"

"Yes, until I marry."

"And then we'll [illegible] each other go. [illegible]"

"[illegible] think I told you that I [illegible] never marry. Didn't I?"

"[illegible] Then ours is to be a lifelong [illegible] sentimental contract!"

"Yes, unless you marry."

"I promise not to," he said, "unless you do."

"I promise not to," she said gayly, "unless you do."

"There remains," he observed, "but one way for you and I ever to marry anybody. And, as I'm hors concours, even that hope is ended."

She flushed; her lips parted, but she checked what she had meant to say, and they walked forward together in silence for awhile until she had made up her mind what to say and how to express it.

"Captain Selwyn, there are two things that you do which seem to me unfair. You still have at times that faraway, absent expression which excludes me, and when I venture to break the silence you have a way of answering, 'Yes, child,' and 'No, child,' as though you were inattentive and I had not yet become an adult. That is my first complaint! What are you laughing at? It is true, and it confuses and hurts me, because I know I am intelligent enough and old enough to—to be treated as a woman—a woman attractive enough to be reckoned with! But I never seem to be wholly so to you."

The laugh died out as she ended. For a moment they stood there confronting one another.

"Do you imagine," he said in a low voice, "that I do not know all that?"

"I don't know whether you do. For all your friendship—for all your liking and your kindness to me—somehow—I don't seem to stand with you as other women do. I don't seem to stand their chances."

"What chances?"

"The—the consideration. You don't call any other woman 'child,' do you? You don't constantly remind other women of the difference in your ages, do you? You don't feel with other women that you are, as you please to call it, hors concours—out of the running. And somehow with me it humiliates, because, even if I am the sort of girl who never means to marry, you—your attitude seems to take away the possibility of my changing my mind. It dictates to me, giving me no choice, no liberty, no personal freedom in the matter. It's as though you considered me somehow utterly out of the question—radically unthinkable as a woman. And you assume to take for granted that I also regard you as—as hors concours. Those are my grievances, Captain Selwyn. And I don't regard you so. And I—and it troubles me to be excluded—to be found wanting, inadequate in anything that a woman should be. I know that you and I have no desire to marry each other, but—but please don't make the reason for it either your age or my physical immaturity or intellectual inexperience."

One of those weather stained seats of Georgia marble stood imbedded under the trees near where she had halted, and she seated herself, outwardly composed and inwardly a little frightened at what she had said.

As for Selwyn, he remained where he had been standing on the lawn's velvet edge, and, raising her eyes again, her heart misgave her that she had wantonly strained a friendship which had been all but perfect, and now he was moving across the path toward her, a curious look in his face which she could not interpret. She looked up as he approached and stretched out her hand.

NEW ZEALANDERS IMPROVING QUALITY OF THEIR CHEESE

There was quite a division on the buying this morning and no one buyer made a big round-up. The highest price realized was 11 3-8.

At the opening of the meeting Mr. J. Riddell called attention to the fact ther New Zealand cheese was selling at a higher price than Canadian cheese. It was explained that New Zealand cheese is old at this time of year and therefore brought better prices, just as Canadian cheese does when it is old in the spring. Mr. Riddell said, however, that the New Zealanders were doing everything in their power to improve the quality of their cheese and urge that Canadians should do the same and keep up the highest standard for the English markets.

Mr. G. E. Barr, of the department at Ottawa, will speak at the annual meetings of the cheese factories and all factories desirous of having Mr. Barr speak at their meetings should send in their dates of closing to Mr. G. A. Gillespie.

Mr. Fitzgerald opened the bidding at 11 even. This was raised to 1-4 by Mr. W. H. Cook. Mr Gillespie named 5-16 and Mr. Fitzgerald raised it to 3-8 with no advance. Gillespie secured Westwood, Villiers, Selwyn and Hemfort. He offered 5-16 for further. Mr. Kerr made it 3-8 and took Shearer, Keene, Lang, Indian River, Maple Leaf, Fraserville, Cavanville, Trewern, Myrtle. Mr. Kerr offered 5-16 for further. Mr. Cook made it 11 3-8 and took Killarney, Norwood, Oakdale, Daisy D., Shamrock. At 11 3-8 Mr. Kerr took the balance of the Board, taking Cedardale, North Dummer, Stoney Lake. The annual field day of sports will be held at Riverside Park Friday, October 8th, at 1.30. You are cordially invited to be present on that occasion. In past years you have been good enough to donate $25 towards the necessary expenses. The boys expect that you will be equally generous this year.

On Monday, October 4th, we relieved the congestion in the junior lower school by opening up another for. The janitor, in consequence, had the care of another room.

Last winter the pupils occupying the seats nearest to the windows on the north and west sides of the building complained a good deal of the cold from the windows. I am pleased to state that the pupils are taking a considerable interest in the library. The supply of books is not equal to the demand. The bells in the class rooms are still silent.

Your obedient servant,

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE AT THE Y.M.C.A. LAST NIGHT

At the Y.M.C.A. last evening was held a conference of ministers, Sunday school superintendents and other workers in the Sunday schools of the with the Religious Work Committee of the Y.M.C.A.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. R. J. Devey, of St. John's Sunday school.

The first part of the evening was given to the discussion of the relation of the Sunday school to the boy, and Mr. Sowrow, of the teaching staff of the city and Normal schools, opened the discussion by pointing out the need of presenting the facts and teachings of the Bible to the boy in a natural and interesting manner. He showed that a study of the characters of the Bible would be interesting and impressive if made real by the teacher to the student.

The second part of the evening was a discussion of the question of teachers and teacher-training. Sheriff Hall led in this subject and emphasized the importance of having male teachers for boys' classes, although experience had often proven that lady teachers were very successful with boys. The need of some kind of training for teachers was pointed out, as well as a means of enlisting and helping those who are not now teachers and who might become such with some instruction and encouragement.

At the close of the meeting, by unanimous vote, it was the conviction of those present that a training class should be formed, and a committee composed of the superintendents of the Sunday schools, and the secretary of the Y.M.C.A. with Mr. Devey as convenor was instructed to make all arrangements for such a class as early as possible.

ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP PLANT

Special to the Review.

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 6.—An attempt was made early to-day by three men to blow up the South Chicago plant of the People's Gas, Light & Coke Company. The men entered the engine-room, overpowered, bound and gagged Engineer John Sullivan, and after removing him outside, exploded nitro-glycerine under the exhaust engine. The engine was destroyed, but the force was not sufficient to damage the huge gasometers, less than one hundred yards away. Inexperience of the men alone, it is said, saved the entire plant from destruction. There are labor troubles at the plant.

FOUND GUILTY OF COMMON ASSAULT

Resident of Harvey Fined $2.00 in County Police Court Yesterday

An assault case was heard by magistrate Edmison at the county police court yesterday, in which a man named Bishop who resides in Harvey, was found guilty of common assault, and fined $2 without costs.

Mr. D. O'Connell acted in the interests of the defendant, and Mr. A. P. Poussette conducted the case for the complainant Rosevear.

Rosevear's evidence was to the effect that on Sunday, September 26th, during a conversation with Bishop at Pearson's hotel in Dummer, he was grossly insulted and without justification assaulted by Bishop, who knocked him down on the concrete floor, and then threw him off the verandah after which he kicked him on the arm, thereby breaking it.

Bishop stated that Rosevear had insulted him and that he had only pushed him off the verandah. He denied having kicked complainant.

PE-RU-NA CHEERFULLY RECOMMENDED FOR COLDS AND CATARRH.

A Prominent Canadian Gives His Experience With the World-Famous Remedy For Catarrh.

Chronic Catarrh Always Begins With An Ordinary Cold.

So Says Dr. Hartman, the Greatest Living Authority On Catarrhal Diseases.

This gives rise to a discharge, or at least a stuffiness of the nasal passages.

Sometimes fever accompanies the first attack, also a feeling of languor, dullness and aching of the bones.

If no attention is paid to it, the mucous congestion is liable to spread down into the larynx, producing hoarseness and into the bronchial tubes, producing a cough.

Even when this occurs, many people pay no attention to it.

Under such circumstances, the congestion is liable to become chronic, producing a condition of the mucous membranes known as catarrh. Catarrh lasts an indefinite time. Catarrh is essentially a chronic condition and does not leave except something is done to relieve it.

CURE COLDS— PREVENT CATARRH.

What should be done when a person catches cold is to take a few doses of Peruna.

But, even in cases where the cold has been neglected and hoarseness or a cough has developed, Peruna can be relied upon to give prompt and permanent relief.

A number of the best people of various countries have given testimonials as to the value of Peruna in such cases.

Followed Dr. Hartman's Advice—Restored to Health.

Mrs. Samuelle Vigneau, Avre au Bord, Isle de La Magdaline, Canada, writes:

"I write to tell you that I am perfectly well. I took only three bottles of your Peruna according to your advice and the directions in your book and it restored my health."

C. H. Parker, Ex-Warden of Compton Co., Quebec, has been mayor of Scotstown for a number of years. He is an influential resident in Scotstown and widely known.

He writes concerning Peruna. Read his letter below:

C. H. PARKER.

"I had several attacks of colds from time to time and finally a severe attack developed into catarrh.

"I was advised to use your celebrated catarrh remedy, and after taking three bottles I find myself completely cured, and I no longer suffer from catarrh or colds.

"I can cheerfully recommend Peruna for colds and catarrh."

If Peruna had no other medicinal value than the promptness with which it relieves common colds, it would be well worth while for any family to keep it in the house constantly.

C.P.R. STOCK AT $1.25 IS ANNOUNCEMENT MADE

At Annual Meeting of Directors Fact is Made Public That Thirty Millions Worth of Stock Will be Disposed of at Twenty-five Per Cent. Premium.

Montreal, Oct. 7.—The Canadian Pacific Railway will issue $30,000,000 of new stock at $125 per share. The announcement was made at the annual meeting held at noon yesterday. That the issue is a premium of 25, is due to the attention which was directed toward the last issue in Parliament last session.

A feature of the meeting was the presence of Miss Charlotte Stopford of Dublin, Ireland, who wanted to see the men who are running the C.P.R., while Albert G. Neville and Harry W. Birks, two leaders of the London Stock Exchange, congratulated the president upon the splendid position of the C.P.R. in the financial world. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy announced that the cash on hand from the sale of land and town sites amounted to $14,000,000, while there was an additional $18,000,000 near at hand as the amount of deferred payments on land.

The president, Sir Wm. Van Horne, announced that authorization for the additional issue of $50,000,000 common stock had been secured, and stated that "anticipating future general requirements of the company, and to meet them as they arise, the directors think it prudent at this time to make provision for the necessary funds by offering to the holders of the ordinary capital stock a portion of the unissued shares.

"It is proposed that the issue shall be in the proportion of 20 per cent. of the shares registered in the name of each individual holder in the books of the company in London, New York, and Montreal, on Nov. 15. Proximo. The usual practice of having payments made in instalments at intervals of about sixty days will be followed and interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum will be allowed on such payments."

MANY THINK THAT BUDGET SHOULD BE ALTERED A LITTLE

London, Oct. 7.—The budget bill has undergone so many changes, some of a radical nature, during the six weeks' debate, and the chancellor of the exchequer has promised to introduce so many amendments on the report stage, that the Government has decided to give the House of Common's a week's holiday in order to enable members to digest the revised proposals.

The original budget estimates do not hold good any longer, and Mr. Lloyd-George is preparing a revised estimate of the yield expected to be produced by his financial proposals as amended during the debates in the House. This will be placed in the hands of the members when they adjourn on Nov. 9, to re-assemble on Nov. 18.

It is suggested in some circles that modifications enough may be introduced into the amended bill to make it more acceptable to the House of Lords.

A particularly interesting turn is given to the situation by the announcement yesterday afternoon that Lord Lansdowne, leader of the Opposition in the House of Lords, is going to Balmoral Castle for the week end.

Whether Mr. Asquith, the Premier, will still be there when the Unionist leader arrives, and what King Edward may be able to do in the way of reconciling them are matters of keen discussion in political circles.

Besides Earl Cawder and Premier Asquith, Reginald McKenna and Lord Hereford have already been consulted.

It is suggested that a compromise might be arranged by the Government slightly modifying its proposals the Lords agreeing then to pass the bill, on the understanding that there should be an immediate appeal to the country.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE OF WOMAN AT DUNDAS

Dundas, Oct. 7.—The police are puzzled over the disappearance of Mrs. Charles Stratford, wife of Chas. Stratford, a respected resident, and mother of his four small children.

Stratford gave his wife some money on Saturday to pay the household expenses, and when she failed to return late Saturday night Stratford asked the aid of the police in finding her.

Tuesday Jos. Taylor and his son George were charged with procuring Mrs. Stratford and were remanded for a week. Evidence was given that one of the Taylors had been seen going into the Osborne Hotel with Mrs. Stratford on Saturday, and the woman, it is alleged, was seen in a field outside the town limits drinking from a bottle that afternoon. Taylor and his son were with the woman at the point where she was last seen.

Stratford left yesterday for Toronto to see if his wife is there, as a Toronto bricklayer, by name of Owens, was here Saturday in company with the Taylors and is thought to know something about the case.

THREE RAILWAY MEN ARE KILLED

Campbellton, N.B., Oct. 7.—A head-on collision occurred on the Intercolonial Railway at Nashe's Creek, 30 miles east of here, early yesterday morning, which resulted in the death of three of the train crew and a fourth fatally injured.

The express from Halifax, in charge of Conductor R. A. McClellan, and a freight special going east, in charge of Conductor J. H. Thompson, collided on a curve at Nashe's Creek station. Both engines were completely wrecked.

Engineer John Morton of Campbellton, on the express, and Engineer H. J. Whalen of Moncton, of the freight, and Express Messenger Morrison of Sussex, were instantly killed. Fireman W. Cook of Campbellton is not expected to recover.

All the passengers escaped uninjured.

All of those killed were married men and leave families.

Toronto, Oct. 7.—By a vote of about three to one the convention of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes yesterday supported a resolution in favor of the suffrage for women. The discussion lasted practically all morning to the exclusion of the other matter on the sessional agenda.

The afternoon was given over to a trip to Niagara Falls, practically all the delegates going along.

It is expected the election of officers will take place on Friday.

SOME CHANGES IN C. N. R. ROUTE

Ottawa, Oct. 7.—The Minister of Railways has approved of two important changes in the route of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway.

One is in the Township of Scarboro, east of Toronto. There the new route leaves the original line of Davis road, striking the Grand Trunk just above Scarboro Junction and going under the Grand Trunk line. It hits the original route near Cherrywood, and then proceeds east as originally approved.

The other change approves of the construction of a line to connect the Toronto and Western with the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo, starting west of Fruitland and continuing to near Bartonville, where the line will enter Hamilton over the T., H. & B. tracks.

PATHETIC REQUEST OF A DYING GIRL

Windsor, Oct. 7.—Ald. Eansor, whose little 11-year-old daughter Ruth was buried in St. Alphonsus' Cemetery, Windsor, on Tuesday, yesterday carried out a pathetic request which she asked of him a few hours before her death. A shaggy-haired Shetland pony which the child won at the Windsor midwinter fair last year, will be given her chum, the young daughter of Fire Chief Murray. Ruth Eansor won the animal by receiving the most votes in the popularity contest conducted by the fair officials. The little Murray girl was Ruth's closest competitor.

SEVEN FOR MANSLAUGHTER AND FIVE FOR ACQUITTAL

Arrest of Woman for Killing Her Father-in-Law Ends in a Deadlock— Mrs. Scott Says She Did it in Self-Defence and Tells Story of Cruelty

London, Ont., Oct. 7.—"I trust that none of you will ever be shot," was Justice Latchford's parting remark to the jury when they returned last night with a disagreement in the case of Mrs. Wesley Scott, charged with the murder of her father-in-law, Harvey Scott, on Sept. 13. The jury stood seven for manslaughter and five for acquittal.

"I regret that you have been unable to agree," said the judge. "That is a matter, however, which concerns yourself more than me. It seems to me that if there was ever a case where a jury having regard for their oath could bring in a verdict, this is one."

The jury were out over two hours. In his half hour's charge to the jury, Justice Latchford practically eliminated the choice of murder or not guilty, plainly directing them to bring in a manslaughter verdict. He pointed out that, by their oath, they could not bring in a verdict of "not guilty."

The jury retired at 7 o'clock.

It was before a crowded court-room that Mrs. Wesley Scott took the stand in her own defence at the afternoon session. She walked steadily and rapidly to the stand. Her manner was one of cool indifference, and every movement of her hands and the muscles of her face gave vent to absolute resignation. She spoke quietly at first in modulated tones, which rose slightly when Justice Latchford complained that he could not hear her.

Then, led by Mr. Meredith, she began the story. Harvey Scott had come to her house in the early morning, about 7 o'clock, as far as she could remember. He seemed to be in one of his regular outburst of temper. There was but one door to the house, and he was there, standing talking to the defenceless woman, with a huge stick in his hand, which he waved towards her as he emphasised his displeasure that some gate had been left open. He brandished it around her head, until she drew back, in absolute terror.

"What did he say?"

"He said something about the west gate being open. He had a big stick in his hand and he said 'I'll see that you don't leave my gates open,'" declared Mrs. Scott, who had replied that she would open the gate when she wished. Then he began hammering the dog, and she went and got the revolver.

"I showed it to him and said. 'Do you see that?' He came towards me with the stick."

"What did you do then?" asked Mr. Meredith.

"I let the revolver off."

"Did you believe your life was in danger?"

"Yes."

Mrs. Scott told of earlier occasions when the old man had gone after her. Mr. Meredith asked if she had ever seen him with a gun before. The witness said: "At one time he came to the house, and I looked through a keyhole, and he had the point sticking into the woodwork. Some time afterwards, as we were coming home from church, he blowed shot past the corner of the house. I was so close I could hear the whiz of the shot."

"Did he ever make threats towards you?"

"Yes. He threatened to strike me a dozen times."

"Did he ever call your names?"

'Yes, he called me 'lunatic,' 'devil' and another unpleasant name."

Once, she said, he had struck her with a piece of fencing and swelled her arm for months; another time he struck her while she was milking; several times when she went to his place for water he ordered her away, and once, when he was taking her cow to pound, he chased her away with a club.

She had twice had her father-in-law charged with assault before a magistrate. "He was fined, and took it out of my husband's wages. The second time the magistrate said he paid a little money to the church, and that it would not do to fine him," she said.

Mr. Meredith for the defence occupied forty minutes in his address to the jury. Mr. Reade took half an hour.

Thousands of names have been attached to petitions circulated throughout the country in behalf of Mrs. Scott.

Notables who attended brilliant reception at Metropolitan Opera House, N.Y., given by the Hudson–Fulton celebration committee

New York, Oct. 6.—More beautiful setting never graced the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House than when the representatives of twenty-seven nations were received formally by the Hudson-Fulton Celebration Commission. Resplendent in the uniform of their rank, officers of the navies of the great powers sat elbow to elbow with the delegates from the lesser countries, nodding approval of the words of congratulation upon the success of the ceremonies in which they have come to join.

Throughout the house, in the boxes and in the auditorium sat those who have come from every quarter of the globe to participate in this dual celebration of the discovery of the Hudson River and the invention of steam navigation. These, in the full dress of their various stations, mingling with many officers from the army and navy of the United States added brilliance to the scene.

The building, both inside and out, had been decorated lavishly for the occasion, and the insignia of the celebration commission intertwined with heavy festoons of green which almost completely hid the inner furnishings formed background for the spectacle.

PEEL COUNTY MAN CHARGED WITH BURNING HIS HOME

English Farm Laborer named John Hollis Testifies That James Buston Had offered Him $50 to Help Destroy His House

Brampton, Ont., Oct. 7.—Justice MacMahon is presiding at the Peel fall assizes. A case of unusual interest is the King v. James Ruston, charged with burning his own house to procure insurance. The case was tried before Chief Justice Mulock at the spring assizes, but the jury disagreed.

The chief witness for the crown is John Hollis, an Englishman who had worked for Ruston from October, 1908, until shortly before the fire (Feb. 20, 1909). He testified that Ruston said to him in February "I'm going to put this thing to hell," and enquired "Do you want to make fifty bucks?" Hollis replied, "Fifty dollars is as good to me as to anyone."

Two nights were occupied in packing the household goods in boxes. They were driven to Toronto. Hollis agreed to meet Ruston at the Clyde Hotel, Toronto, and did so. It was then arranged that Hollis was to return by C.P.R., getting off at Snelgrove Station, loaf around until 10 or 11 o'clock, fire the barn, walk to Brampton and return to Toronto at 7 next morning. But he relented, and, seeking Ruston in Toronto, told him this was a fiendish thing and he would have nothing to do with it. The thought of the cattle and horses being burned influenced him, and he spoke to one of the insurance companies.

Dixon Rutherford, a young farmer living within a mile of the Ruston place, was returning home about 2 a.m. and was the first to see the fire. When he got there the little girl was sitting on a mattress with a quilt about her. There were also other articles of clothing beside her. Ruston said, "I just got out with my life. When I got up the house was in flames. I took my child out through the window." Ruston was without his coat and vest, but both of these and a good overcoat were found on the mattress.

The insurance on the house and outbuildings and contents, according to the evidence of the representatives of the Peel Farmers' Insurance Co. and the London Fire Insurance Co., was $3,300. James Giffin testified that he had offered $5,000 for the place.

The defence will rely on the insurance figures as showing that Ruston would have lost money on the fire. There was $1,000 on the house, which was valued at $1,500; $700 on contents, valued at $1,200; $1,000 on barn, valued at $600; $700 on grain and $600 on stock. Only the house house was burned. There was no grain in the barn, so that no claim could be made on it, while, though the prosecution claim the stock was over-insured, it brought $720 by auction after the fire.

THIS WOMAN WAS MARRIED 6 TIMES

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 7.—Terrace M. Chapman pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy yesterday, admitting that she had married six men without having obtained a divorce from any of them.

BURNED WAY OUT OF JAIL

Cobourg, Oct. 7.—An unusual escape was effected by C. Peters of Haldimand Township, who was arrested by a Warkworth constable and lodged in the lockup at Castleton on a charge of theft. Tuesday at Castleton after a short interval of freedom he gave himself up and was brought to Cobourg jail. He was remanded until next Tuesday. He is charged with stealing a number of articles, including a watch, from a resident of Burnley, Northumberland County. He is a married man with four children.

The Daily Review

THURSDAY, OCT. 7, 1909.

THE CANADIAN CLUB

The Canadian Club of Peterborough will probably get ready for business before long. At the same time, it is not altogether certain that a body of men entertaining itself with good things, mental and physical, is quite the thing. The spirit of culture manifests its true self in communicating itself to others. It is a pity to keep good things to oneself. Dr. Macdonald, the editor of the Globe, is lecturing on his impressions of Britain. He is a man of enthralling eloquence and sound heart. He is also courageous, and, to a certain extent, gigantesque. He is one of those figures that arise and rule at critical junctures. To have him in Peterborough on such a topic is most desirable. He has been here, but that was before he had become a ruler in Israel. It would be well for the Canadian Club to hold lectures under its auspices, rather than for the few. As a Managing Committee and as the nucleus of an audience, the association would perform its function. We hope to hear Dr. Macdonald under such inspiring conditions, before the times and conditions with which he deals have passed on their way. Women should not be debarred from lectures. The pursuit of knowledge is not limited to sex.

Many eminent speakers have addressed the Guelph Canadian Club during the life time of that organisation, but it is doubtful if ever a more eloquent, a more forcible, and altogether a more fascinating speaker ever addressed them of a more interesting subject than Dr. J. A. Macdonald, who last night, in a wonderful speech, gave some of his impressions of Britain, gained on his recent visit to the Imperial Press Conference.—Guelph Herald.

DEMAND AN INQUIRY

Wherever one goes it is still the cry, "The Government must take this matter up. Such outrageous and barefaced perjury was never foisted on a long-suffering people before." West Peterborough has been a long time leading up to the present crisis, for crisis it is. The Liberal Association and the Liberal Conservative Association should, through their executives, get together and petition the government for an inquiry. The Liberal-Conservative Executive, we are informed, is ready and willing. Will the Liberal Association come forth? (Why does the Liberal organ, the Examiner, not accept the offer made by the Review and assist in clearing up once and for all a crime, a shame and a scandal. There has never been anything to rouse public feeling in Peterborough like this general and discriminate lying before. Justice has been mocked and the people likewise. West Peterborough has been made a by-word and a reproach, and it will remain so unless purging measures are taken.

PRISON FOR THE PERJURERS

(The Mail and Empire.)

By the Ministerial Association of Peterborough a firm stand is taken on the question of the perjury in the recent election dispute. The association points to the fact that the lying was committed openly and shamelessly, and deplores "the conditions which tempt weak men to such dishonorable and conscienceless action." Other commentators go a step further and insist that an investigation be held with a view to discovering the the truth and to punishing those who have been guilty of perjury and those who have instigated the perpetration of this crime.

Certainly the situation is something of which the administrators of criminal justice should take cognizance. An election took place, and a petition was submitted against the return of the successful candidate on charges of corruption that had been sworn to by a large number of voters. In some cases very complete details of the alleged bribery were given, and the money was produced. The trial came on in due course, and to the astonishment of the complainants, men who had sworn that they had been bribed entered the witness-box and swore the other way about. They had been interviewed by the defence, and they now declared on oath that in their former affidavits they perjured themselves. The perjury apparently was not limited to the men who publicly admitted the crime. There are said to be other cases, which were not gone into owing to the fact that they would not have influenced the result of the election trial had they been exposed. Now it is acknowledged that there was perjury by the witnesses in one in one or other of the stories to which they swore. The men perjured themselves when they declared that they had been bought. Or, they perjured themselves when they swore, first, through an affidavit privately sought from them, and afterwards in court, that their accusation when they made it was, to their knowledge, deliberately and maliciously untrue.

With the mass of lying before the country the matter cannot be permitted where it does to-day. It must be thoroughly and impartially investigated and the parties who are guilty, either of perjury or of subornation of perjury, must be punished fully and without mercy. Not for any party purpose, but absolutely and solely in the public interest, must this extraordinary case be probed. If perjury so flagrant and so impudent can pass without receiving the punishment for which it calls, our entire system of justin will become farcical, for every man will swear as his interests dictate.

UNIVERSITY WITHOUT STUDENTS

How many students are there attending the University of Saskatchewan, which opened its classes at Saskatoon this week? No one knows, or at least no one from Saskatoon will admit that he knows. The papers say that there is a "good attendance," but that is a pretty sure indication that the attendance is small. Saskatoon papers are not slow to boost, and three or four students in attendance would surely have been announced in figures. Some one has whispered about Regina that there are no students at the university, and that the five professors are sitting down preparing for the next term studies. In the King's hotel last night a party of citizens discussed the matter and the report that there were no students attending the university was generally accepted as true. While the subject was being talked Frank Blackstock, a well known real estate man from the Booster City, came down stairs. Joining the group he was immediately asked as to the progress of the university. "Oh, they are busy ploughing up the and for the grounds," he said. "Are the professors demonstrating their knowledge of agriculture by running the ploughs?" asked one, but Mr. Blackstock rejoined, "Oh, no, the professors are busy with the classes." Asked how many students there were attending, Mr. Blackstock said he really hadn't heard how many, but there were "quite a few."

Cornered later he claimed he had not kept track of the number of students attending the university, but he knew that the classes were started all right. Finally he admitted that he didn't know of any students attending at all. There are five professors on the ground, however, and these will be kept very busy preparing for the next season's classes.—Regina Standard.

MONKEY ROBS POLICEMAN

New York—Adam Ward, an attendant at Roche's bathing pavilion, Far Rockaway Beach, was looking in the dressing rooms after the bathers had gone, when he found a monkey dressed in a red bathing suit. Ward took the monkey to the police station.

After the doorman had locked up the monkey, the lieutenant on duty missed a fifty cent piece that he had in his waistcoat pocket. The money was found in the monkey's jacket.

When one is robbed of money, it may be a misfortune; but when one is robbed of health, it is a calamity.

Faulty digestion, if neglected, quickly develops into chronic Indigestion and Dyspepsia. The way to prevent serious Stomach Trouble is to take a "Fruit-a-tives" tablet half an hour before meals.

"Fruit-a-tives", or fruit juice tablets, sweetens and strengthens the stomach, insures sound digestion, and corrects the tendency to Constipation which almost always accompanies Indigestion.

How King Will Open Hospital.

London, Oct. 6.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Regarding the King opening the hospital at Montreal, an official of the cable company said that such a thing as the King touching the button at Buckingham Palace, and solely by that means performing the ceremony, was impossible. If such an arrangement could be made, the King would touch the button at the palace, then the operator at the Irish cable station would touch the key giving the signal to Canso, where the operator who would also touch the key, would give the signal to Montreal.

No Licenses For Aviators.

Albany, N.Y., Oct. 6.—Aviators need not have a state license to operate, according to a ruling made yesterday at the Secretary of State's office.

Herbert Sturges of 700 Park avenue, New York City, who says he is at present a chauffeur, made application for an aviator's licence. In his letter he said he wished to have license No. 1, and that any fee determined by law would be promptly paid.

Lived on Raw Blubber.

Copenhagen, Oct. 6.—A despatch from Tromsoe says seven members of a Norwegian expedition, who spent last winter at King Charles Land, but had been presumed to be dead, have arrived at Tromsoe on a coal steamer from Spitzbergen. The men suffered tremendous hardships. They crossed on the ice from King Charles Land to Spitzbergen with extreme difficulty, living almost entirely on raw blubber.

An Anglo-American Alliance.

Cincinnati, Oct. 6.—The so-called union of defence between the United States and Great Britain to offset the growing naval power of Germany, as advocated by Lord Northcliffe and Lord Charles Beresford, was declared to be absurd in a resolution offered yesterday in the German Alliance National Convention by Dr. Ernst Richards, professor of German in the University of Columbia, New York city. The resolution also declares that any movement towards that end would be certain to be met by strenuous opposition from the millions of German-Americans and Irish-Americans.

Unrest In Venezuela.

Willemstad, Oct. 6.—According to the latest reports received here from Venezuela, that republic is in a condition of considerable unrest.

A number of prominent men have been arrested and imprisoned in the fortress of San Carlos, the dungeon for political offenders near Maracaibo.

A story is current in Venezuela to the effect that Great Britain may aid a movement headed by Castro, because of the refusal last month of the Venezuelan Government to abolish the differential duty collected on goods sent into the republic from West Indian points.

Chloroforms Mother; Steals Girl.

Boston, Oct. 6.—Chloroforming his sweetheart's mother, Mrs. Florence V. Higgins, while she was asleep, lifting the 16-year-old girl bodily from the same bed and carrying her off and taking from the house $220 in cash, are the charges which the police are making against John H. Burnham, 22 years old.

Neither Burnham nor the young woman has yet been located. He had known her for some time, but had been forbidden by her parents to visit their home in the Jamaica Plains district.

Count Tolstoi's Health.

St Petersburg, Oct. 6.—The health of Count Leo Tolstoi is again exciting apprehension. He fainted twice after his return to Yasnaya Polyiana from his trip to Moscow. It was the first time he had been there in several years. One fainting fit lasted ten minutes.

The physician who is the count's constant companion, succeeded in restoring him to consciousness.

The aged author, after several hours' rest, was able to undertake a short promenade.

G.N.W. Manager Gone.

Berlin, Ont., Oct. 6.—Herbert Smith, local manager of the Great Northwestern Telegraph Co., left town last Friday night and several hundred dollars of the company's funds are reported missing. He was last seen taking the trolley for Galt.

Smith is a dark, good-looking young man, with a crippled foot, and walks with a decided limp.

The company is offering a reward for his arrest.

London's New Joke.

London is holding its sides because of a wonderful new joke. It's rather a shame to tell it to you, but it's too good to keep. The first Englishman asked the second, "Why is Melba like a Dutch oyster?" Get ready, now, it's coming. "Because she is an Australian." Isn't that the acme of wit? An "oyster alien!" And people dare to say the English are not humorous.—Springfield Republican.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Oct. 6.—(Special.)—In local export live stock circles business has been rather dull of late on account of the continued discouraging advices from all the leading foreign markets and the sharp decline in prices during the past three weeks for American, Canadian and Northwest ranch cattle, and the prices that were realized noted losses by shippers of $10 to $12 per head on their shipments. The above has tended to check the demand for ocean freight space to some ports, but rates show no important change. All the Liverpool space for October has been engaged at 32s 6d, and 75 per cent. of the London at 25s to 30s. The Glasgow space is only being let from week to week at 32s 6d, and the Manchester at 25s.

At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market this morning the offerings consisted of 1200 cattle, 500 sheep, 400 lambs, 500 hogs, and 250 calves. The feature of the trade continues to be the weak undertone to the market for cattle, on account of the large supplies coming forward, and prices declined 1½c per lb. As the quality of the stock was generally good there was a good demand at the above reduction in prices. Choice steers sold at 4¾c to 5c; good, at 4¼c to 4½c; fair, at 3¾c to 4c; medium, at 3¼c to 3½c; good cows, at 3¼c to 4c; common, at 3c to 3¼c; good bulls, at 3c to 3¼c; inferior at 2¼c to 2¾c, and canners, at 1½c per lb. Supplies of sheep and lambs were smaller than they have been of late, and in consequence a steadier feeling prevailed in the market and values show no further change. The demand was good from local buyers, and sales of lambs were made at 5¼c, and sheep, at 3½c per lb. Receipts of calves were larger than they have been for some time past, but as the demand was ample to absorb all prices were maintained and sales were made at from $3 to $12 each, as to quality. A feature of the hog situation was the stronger feeling in the market and prices advanced 5c to 50c per cwt., notwithstanding the fact that supplies were fairly large, for which the demand was keen from packers and sales of selected lots were made at $9 to $9.25 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

This year the line will be opened north of Sellwood into the midst of the Moose Country, they are reported very thick, the Engineers say that they have never seen anything like it, the Moose season up there opens October 15th, fifteen days before the Deer. We have something special on a new place that will take three parties of deer hunters

How She Came to Withdraw One of the Camp Rules.

By CLYDE LAWRENCE.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

"Young ladies, I wish to make an important announcement," said Miss Darboy, teacher of the class in French at the Wellington private school for young ladies.

The fourteen young ladies looked up in expectancy.

"During the summer vacation, beginning two weeks hence, I shall have tents on the shore of the lake, and such of you as can arrange it with your parents may summer there. There will be boating, bathing and fishing. Fresh meats and vegetables will be supplied every day. It is a new departure, and I hope it will be a success."

It was seen that she hadn't quite finished yet, and the applause was withheld.

"It will be a young ladies' camp in the strictest sense of the word," she continued. "No members of the other sex will be permitted near it. Farmer Jackson will see to that. That is all. Hand in your names as soon as possible, please."

"But won't our brothers and cousins be allowed to come to see us?" asked Miss Harden for the rest of the class.

"Impossible," she replied in French. "In your case, Miss Harden, I happen to know that you have neither brothers nor cousins of the male sex."

"But I have a"—

No, she didn't say it. The teacher opened her eyes very wide and drew herself up and frightened her.

Miss Pearl Harden was fatherless, and her widowed mother had only a limited income. There were other pupils who had to consult the matter of income as well, and when Miss Darboy had made up her list for the summer camp it totaled seven names. Six of them had no complaint of the rules to be enforced; the seventh said nothing, but seemed to be thinking a great deal.

Vacation came. The camp was pitched and occupied, and Farmer Jackson took a shotgun into the fields with him and kept an eye on the approaches to the camp.

Everything went along quietly for a week, and the enemy was lulled into a sense of security. No pirate craft approached, and Farmer Jackson went to bed with conscience free from killing. Then Miss Darboy took chances. She wanted some things from her room in the village, and she arranged with the driver of the provision wagon to ride up with him.

Halfway to town a wheel came off the vehicle, and after gazing at the wreck for five minutes the driver announced that no four wheeled wagon could continue its mad career on three wheels. This meant that Miss Darboy must walk. She gave up her errand to go back to her charges. The boy showed her a short cut across the fields and went off with the horses, but he did not warn her to watch out for a red and white bull pasturing in one of the fields.

Miss Darboy soon had use for all her French exclamations. She first heard rumbles like distant thunder, then a savage bellow, then a trembling of the earth and the sight of a creature bearing down upon her. She ran, of course. There were two shade trees standing close together, and she reached one and had gained a perch ten feet high while the bull stopped to sniff at the hat that had blown from her head. Women are not natural climbers, but under stress of peril they have been known to add that feat to their many accomplishments.

"Go away—go right away from here!" commanded Miss Darboy in both French and English as the bull came up and pawed and bellowed. He absolutely refused. Then Miss Darboy called for help, but no help came.

An hour had passed when the bull went to the creek to drink. He didn't forget the lady up the tree, however. He kept looking back, and she realized that to descend would bring him back on the charge. He had satisfied his thirst when he suddenly emitted a bellow of defiance and went dashing across the field. There was another intruder. This time it was a young man. He heard the bellow, saw the bull and at once made for the trees. He came up at a hot pace, made a long spring to catch a branch and escaped a vicious sweep of the horns by inches. He had been settled on a branch for three minutes before he heard a voice asking:

"Sir, what shall we do?"

"Good lands, a lady up a tree!" he gasped. "How did you get there?"

"That creature chased me, and I—I climbed."

"I can't hand you my card, but my name is Randall Hope."

"And I am Miss Darboy of the school."

"Y-e-s. You are the French teacher. You have charge of the summer camp. You have issued an edict that no man shall approach it within half a mile. That old farmer with a shotgun turned me back yesterday, and I was trying it again today."

"You wanted to see me?" was asked.

"Oh, no! I wanted to see Miss Harden. I am in love with her, you know."

"Sir, Miss Harden is under my charge, and the rules I have made must be obeyed."

"Well, all right," replied Mr. Hope as he settled himself more comfortably on his perch. "I was honest enough to tell you that I was in love with Miss Harden, but if I'm to be kept out of the camp I'll stay here. Nice afternoon, isn't it? Are you enjoying your vacation?"

Miss Darboy looked across at him in indignation and muttered to herself in French. She was just about to announce that she would descend and go straight to camp when the bovine, who had been quiet for a moment, began pawing and bellowing. She therefore changed her mind and humbly asked:

"Won't he get tired and leave us pretty soon?"

"It will take a week to tire him out," was the reply. "Yes, I expect to be here for at least seven days. You can see how mad and determined he is. You had better tie yourself to a limb, so that when you grow weak from hunger you will not fall to the ground."

"Merci! Merci! But you can't mean it, monsieur?"

"You had started for the village, probably. When you don't return the girls will think you have eloped. This is just the season for elopements, you know. Let me stand up and look for the camp. I see it. The girls are running around in wild excitement. A boat with a man in it is drawing near, and you are not there to shoo him away!"

"Oh, my unhappy self!" moaned Miss Darboy. "I shall be blamed. No one will believe me. I shall be disgraced!"

The teacher shed tears in French and was quiet for a few minutes. Mr. Hope watched her and saw that a mental struggle was going on. He was too wise to interrupt, and presently she said in very humble English:

"Mr. Hope, does Miss Harden's mother know that you love her daughter?"

"I was to have seen her tomorrow to tell her and ask her consent to the marriage."

"Possibly."

"And it needn't get to the young ladies' ears that I was—was up a tree?"

"Not unless you tell the story yourself."

"And you could accompany me to camp the same as if I had met you in the village?"

"Just the same. Yes, I could accompany you to camp, and I could take a stroll with Miss Harden and have a talk, and you could let some of the other fellows pay calls and add to the zest"—

"Mr. Hope, proceed to drive the creature hence."

Mr. Hope dropped his handkerchief to the grass, and while the bull was sniffing at it the young man swung down and grabbed him by the tail and twisted and shouted. Away went the frightened bovine on a gallop, and Miss Darboy was assisted down. Two hours later she was saying to her campers:

"Young ladies, I beg to announce that the restriction against male visitors to this camp has, for good and sufficient reasons, been withdrawn. No applause, please."

Forgotten by Death.

Once upon a time, in the days when things never happened, there lived a man who feared only one thing and that was death. If he could live forever, he thought, how fine it would be. Maybe Death overheard him and decided to grant his wish, or perhaps being busy taking off young children, promising young men and women, or parents who were needed, Death simply forgot him. At any rate, the man lived on and on. He outlived his family, his descendants, generation after generation, all his friends, and the descendants of his friends. No one knew him, and his day of usefulness was so long ago that, having none of the hopes, ambitions, or experiences of today, it was as if he talked in a different language. He lived on, and on, and forever, but Death had forgotten him, and though he prayed to die as fervently as he had once prayed to live, he couldn't die. And if you sorrow for one who has lost his life, think how much worse it would be to never lose it; to be like this tired old man whom Death has forgotten.—Atchison Globe.

Tibetan Skull Drums.

A drum of an extreme repulsiveness of nature is one used by the lamas of Tibet at some of their church ceremonies. For this the craniums of two skulls, preferably children's, are taken, and over the concave side of each is stretched the skin of a snake. The two skulls are then cemented at the vertice to either side of a wooden disk covered with a cotton cloth, the stretched skins being outermost. These drums are often ornamented by having the heads of devils and such like horrors, the more repulsive the better, painted upon them in red and blue colors. The method employed in playing them is rather curious. To the wooden disk between the two halves a cord is fastened by which the drum can be suspended and then rapidly rotated. Two short cords with knobs at their ends hang down in such a way that as the drum revolves they strike alternately on either face and thus produce a regular "tum, tum."

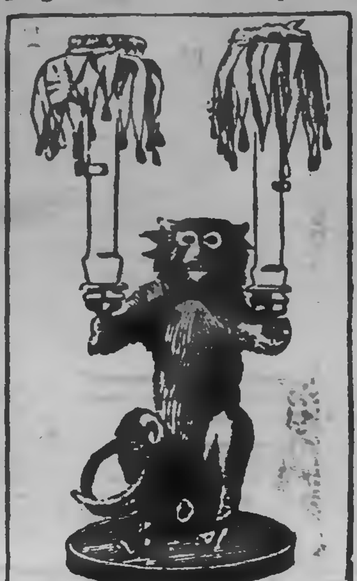
TROPHIES AS ORNAMENTS.

Monkey Cake Stands and Candelabra of Rhinoceros Tusk.

People who are fond of the hunt have introduced a new fad that bids fair to be imitated by many who never have handled a gun. This is the custom of having trophies of the chase mounted as table ornaments or other objects around the house. Instead of being mounted on a flat piece of board and hung high over the door a stag's antlers or other large horns are now transformed into a hatrack. Indeed a series of wild boar tusks may be so mounted that the whole stand consists of the horn.



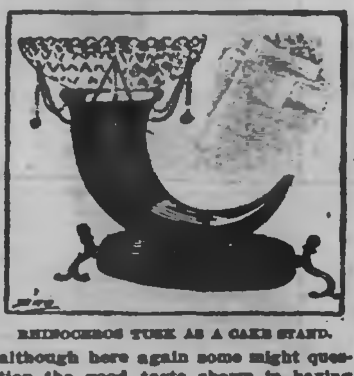
PET MONKEY HOLDING CANDELABRA.

Several of the smaller objects which have been fashioned in this way are shown in the accompanying cuts. Very odd was the liquor stand owned by a hunter of big game, who preserved somewhat more than the tusks of one of his kills. The great flat foot of an elephant was carefully mounted, and in the hollow were set two silver holders.

The foot of an ostrich may also be utilized. Here a goodly portion of the bird's leg was left attached, and the whole, filled with some heavy material, is used as a stop to stand inside an open door.

Strangest of all and almost revolting in its realism is the candle holder. A pet monkey was turned over to a taxidermist when it died and stuffed in a sitting posture, with arms raised. In the hands were placed the bases of candelabra.

The rhinoceros tusk mounted as a cake stand is artistic in appearance, although here again some might question the good taste shown in having such an object connected with the table. The rhinoceros tusk is mounted in silver, and the crystal cake dish makes of it both a handsome and useful article.



RHINOCEROS TUSK AS A CAKE STAND.

PRICKLY HEAT.

Little children suffer greatly from prickly heat during these warm days and although this eruption is not at all dangerous it is extremely uncomfortable and hard to bear, making the little folks cross and unmanageable.

This rash appears most frequently about the neck and on the chest, and to avoid it the mother should take every precaution, as once it has made its appearance it is very hard to control. Pin up the pretty curls from the little daughter's neck or by experimenting with a ribbon arranged in filet style your little girl may look as quaintly pretty with her hair fastened out of her way as she has heretofore with her floating locks.

Lessen the number of the children's clothes during the summer months. Short stockings and but one petticoat will aid in keeping the little folks cool, worn over their little drawers and waists. Rompers with merely an underwaist and drawers are sufficient for the hot days of this month and next.

A sponge bath several times a day may be given with good effect. The water should be just tepid and the child gently sponged over the entire surface of the body. If he has been playing violently a cloth dipped in cold water and pressed to the back of the neck while the bath is being given will aid in giving him comfort.

Several sponge baths a day will take the place of the incessant water drinking to which children are prone in summer, as the system absorbs all the water it requires during the bath without harm to any organ. Between meals the child should be given what water it needs, but do not let this be too cold.

After the bedtime bath a rub with alcohol will prove soothing, though if prickly heat is present omit the rub, as the alcohol will sting unmercifully.

Prickly heat will disappear before a treatment of half talcum and half bicarbonate of soda used as a powder.

How a Bachelor Was Captured

(When a New York bachelor broker loves his pretty stenographer desperately, but respects family tradition, business duties and his own unbenedictian customs with almost equal intensity, leave it to Clyde Fitch to talk the two characters to strangulation in three acts and marry them before the audience gets away.

This was the task so delightfully accomplished in "The Bachelor," which was the Royal Alexandra's entertainment last evening. A most striking distinction of this comedy is its second-reader simplicity. The theme and its chapters is as uninvolved as the romance of two meadow lambs. In no line is the fringe of sentiment touched except when Miss Maycliffe, as "Milly," blubbers on the chintz piano top at her brother's duplicity. "The Bachelor," is sweet and wholesome and fascinating, a tonic in refined and sparkling humor, and excellently acted.

"The Bachelor," is a Mr. George Goodale (who in turn is Mr. Charles Cherry), member of the brokerage firm of Goodale & Holmes. Into his office one day comes a dream in feminine attire, who says she stenographs, and on her statement gets the job. Day by day, Goodale finds the props of his bachelor vows wobbling, and finally confesses his love to Milly, his pretty employee, and becomes engaged. Here enters the inevitabl dissonance. A smart kid brother, eager to engineer a wealthy match for his sister, upbraids Goodale for taking Milly out to theatres and luncheons, and learns from him that he loves no woman, and never intends to marry. This information in the second act he confesses to his sister, who, in her pride and resentment, breaks the engagement, vowing that nothing can restore their former relations. It is now the witching hour in Goodale's seared heart, when Cupid, with arrow after arrow, awakens him to a sense of loneliness and sentimental misery. No longer doth the girl pursue. With proud independence she accepts the homage of Goodale, and his promises and pleadings, until the logic of the situation has gone far enough. So she turns about, faces the heartbroken male, and, as has happened since Adam, joins hand and heart for life. Is it not second book simplicity? The dialogue is strikingly staccato in its movement, rippling along like a laughing brooklet.—Toronto News.

WINNIPEG A WONDERFUL CITY; VIEWS OF WESTERN OPTIMIST

Mr. G. L. VanNorman, of the Dominion Land Company, Winnipeg, is in the city to-day. Mr. VanNorman called on the Review to-day and was most enthusiastic over the prospects of the great western city.

"Every paper you pick up I know" he said, "contains something optimistic about Winnipeg or the west, by some visitor here. This optimism is certainly justified and it is not the mere enthusiasm of the strangers carried away by what they have seen but it is justified in every sense of the word. I have been in Winnipeg practically all my business career and know from actual business experience and dealings in the commercial world that their impressions are right."

Mr. VanNorman says the land exchanges in the west this year have been carried on on a stupendous scale, and the influx of settlers has been remarkable.

"In Winnipeg the increase has been very great," he said, "and building operations have been wonderfully brisk. New citizens have been coming in in great numbers and at times the hotels find it almost impossible to accommodate. The big C. P. R. hotel there has been doing such a thriving business that the management have found it necessary to increase its accommodation facilities in order to meet the demands of the guests. Extra storeys are being put on the building and the increased accommodation will, I believe, afford rooms for between three and four hundred guests."

Mr. VanNorman is here on a business visit, and will only remain a couple of days, after which he will return to Winnipeg. He has been home on a two weeks' visit to his parents Col. and Mrs. VanNorman, of Simcoe, Ont.

FORMER PASTOR OF MURRAY STREET CHURCH REJOINS CONGREGATION FOR AN EVENING

Rev. Jonathan Bastow the Guest at a Reception Given by Rev. and Mrs. J. R. Webb—A Very Enjoyable Occasion.

The reception given by Rev. and Mrs. J. R. Webb in the Sunday school of the Murray street Baptist church last evening, in honor of the former pastor, the Rev. Jonathan Bastow, was a very pleasant and successful function; the fact of their former pastor being present bringing out a large representation of the congregation and the accommodation of the Sunday school was taxed to its utmost. Tables were placed about the large room and those present moved about meeting one another in a sociable manner while at intervals, the Sunday school orchestra rendered selections and an impromptu programme of vocal and instrumental music was given by several of the young members of the church. A large number of cut and potted flowers made a very pleasing effect to the scene. Dr. Scott acted as chairman, and read letters of regret from several who had been invited, but were unable on account of previous engagements to be present. The Ministerial Association was represented by the Rev. W. C. Riddiford and the Rev. J. Potter, each giving a short speech, and Rev. Canon Davidson, who came in later and also spoke.

When the chairman called upon the Rev. Mr. Bastow to speak the gathering evidenced their pleasure by heartily clapping hands, and when he arrived at the platform all present arose and sang "Auld Lang Syne." The visitor was considerably affected at the ovation tendered him and for some minutes found it difficult to respond. It was a beautiful scene. It was five years since Rev. Mr. Bastow had charge of the work at Murray street church, but to those present last evening he appeared the same kind, and loving friend whom they had learned to love and respect during his untiring ministry among them.

REV. MR. BASTOW.

Rev. Mr. Bastow commenced by remarking on the spirit of evolution that was in evidence throughout the work of the church and expressed a sincere wish that the intended new building under the supervision of the pastor, would be a success. In regard to Mrs. Bastow he said that she was enjoying splendid health and was the superintendent of the Sunday school in connection with the church. Both he and Mrs. Bastow had a far deeper interest in the congregation of Murray st. church than was probably realized and they had always been remembered in prayer. The church had been the object of a great many prayers and you occupy a very dear spot in our hearts and always will, said the Rev. Mr. Bastow. We are bound together by links that are very sacred and delightful and will be so 'till the last. That is one of the reasons why I could not pass Peterborough and I have had delightful recollections all the while I have been looking into your faces. Judging from the many letters we have received from members of the congregation since our departure, I am led to believe that my ministry among you was fruitful and of great value to you and myself. Rev. Mr. Bastow spoke of the proficiency of their present pastor and said he hoped that his ministry would be crowned by the completion of the new sanctuary which they had in view. He spoke of the work in connection with the church which he now had charge of, attributing the success which he had met with partly to Mrs. Bastow, who had given the word to go after he had paid a first visit and had come back to Peterborough and explained, to her the difficulties which they would be called upon to contend with. But now they had a good Sunday school, a $4,000 parsonage nearly all paid for and the church was now $5,000 better off than when he first went there.

The outlook had been dark, but he knew he was acting with divine guidance and his efforts had been crowned with success. I am now 74 years of age, but do not feel that old, said the visitor and I look forward to many more years in the service of the Master. Rev. Mr. Bastow concluded his remarks by saying how glad he was to meet those with whom he had been associated in his ministerial work in Peterborough and also all his other friends and urged all present to put forth their best efforts in the work of Christ.

After refreshments had been served Mr. R. E. Harding on behalf of the congregation, moved a vote of thanks to Rev. and Mrs. Webb for the opportunity given them to meet in a sociable manner with their former pastor. This was seconded by Mr. J. D. Dunlop and carried with much applause.

Rev. Mr. Webb replied that it gave Mrs. Webb and himself unbounded pleasure to spend a social evening with their friends. He referred to the fact that when he was first called to Murray street church, he had received two letters; one from Rev. Mr. Bastow urging him to accept the invitation on account of the loyalty of the people and the other from Rev. Canon Davidson, president of the Ministerial Association, at that time, describing the devotion and zeal of the church people.

The reception was brought to a close by the singing of "Blest be the Tie That Binds," after which the Rev. Canon Davidson pronounced the benediction.

WEDDING BELLS

HOPKINS—HOPWOOD

A pretty October wedding was celebrated at St. John's church, Emily, on Wednesday afternoon, October 6th, when Anna Pearl, eldest daughter of Mrs. Ellen Hopwood, was united in marriage to Mr. John Hopkins, son of Mr. A. Y. Hopkins, of Kinmount. The officiating clergyman was Rev. Mr. Earle, of Christ church, Omemee. Miss Alice Hopwood, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, while Miss Preston, of Midland, presided at the organ and played the wedding march and other appropriate selections during the ceremony. The church was prettily decorated with autumn leaves and flowers. After the ceremony a sumptuous wedding dinner was served at the residence of the bride's mother, after which the happy couple left on the evening train for Toronto and other points west. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful gold watch, and to the maid of honor a jewelled bracelet. The handsome array of presents and the attendance of a large number of guests from distant points testified to the esteem in which the bride is held.

THE MAGISTRATES WERE MERCIFUL

Three youngsters were up before Magistrates Mathison and Joyce on Monday afternoon on a charge of breaking into McMaster & Pearing's hardware store on Sunday, September 26th. The youngsters obtained an entrance by breaking a window in the rear of the store and they abstracted jack-knives, an air gun and fifty-five cents in cash. Mr. George Cochrane, of Peterborough, was present on behalf of the Children's Aid Society in event of the children being committed to the care of the society, but their Worships were in a merciful mood and let the boys off on suspended sentence, after reprimanding them severely.—Havelock Standard

Important to Ladies

It is not often an opportunity occurs at your door to see the latest Parisian and New York styles in hair goods, yet such is the case, as Prof. Dorenwend, of Toronto, is visiting this town, and invites your inspection of these goods at his private apartments at the hotel.

These hair goods styles, when properly adjusted, protect and ornament the head, soften and beautify the expression of the face, and consequently tone up an aged appearance. Be sure and see them at the Oriental Hotel on Friday, October 22nd.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

Blacklister Had the Customary Answer to "Where Did You Get Your Liquor?"

Will you tell the court where you got your liquor, asked Chief Roszel of a blacklister this morning, who had just pleaded guilty to a charge of being found intoxicated yesterday.

I got it from a man whom I do not know, replied the accused. This by the way is the customary reply to this question. The accused stuck to his answer that he did not know the man. He said that he met this person at the Grand Trunk station and had been given one drink.

I should have gone back to the woods last night, but will do so this afternoon, if you will allow me, said the indicted one to his Worship.

No, I did not, replied the accused. I gave him 50c. a short time ago to get something to eat.

And you say that you only had one drink ?

Yes.

Well, I'll reserve judgment in this case, said the Magistrate.

CHEAPER THAN DR. COOK COULD QUOTE

Wanted to Sell a Fur-Lined Overcoat for One Dollar

A Toronto man who claims he is a former resident of Peterborough, and who says this is his first visit to this city in twenty years, certainly hit the town in a bad shape to renew old acquaintances. This morning he offered a fur lined overcoat to a Review reporter for the very small sum of one dollar on condition he could redeem it later if he wanted to for five times that figure.

However, the reporter didn't want to go into the pawnbroking business on even a small scale and naturally didn't have the dollar anyway.

"I'm sick and may die before night," said the stranger. It was suggested that the city doctor be made known of his case, but this didn't appeal to the man and he finally said he would be very glad to have five cents to get a drink. He was given a negative answer on the nickel proposition also.

Give Interesting Address Before Varsity Studests' Club

Mr. W. J. Francis, C.E., of Montreal, addressed the Engineers' Club, of the Toronto University in the Chemical and Mining Building yesterday afternoon, his subject being "The Relation of Technical Education, Personality and Character," which was a resume of his own experience in this line. Mr. Francis is a graduate of the School of Practical science, and has been engaged in Government work as consulting engineer for some time. He was called into consultation regarding the danger threatening Quebec bridge.

Dean Galbraith talked for a few minutes on his recollection of an engineer's education in his younger days, describing the struggles a young man had to go through with and the lack of the facilities and advantages of to-day. After the meeting Mr. Francis was entertained at the St. Charles' Cafe by the past presidents of the society. W. B. Black, the president of the club, occupied the chair. —Mail and Empire.

CONGREGATION'S APPRECIATION OF JUDGE ROGER'S WORTH

Honored With Address and Presentation at St. Paul's Last Night—Has Been a Useful Worker in the Church For Many Years—Interested in Moral Movements in City.

The congregation of St. Paul's church said farewell last night to one of its most prominent members, Judge Roger, whose duties as Judge of Durham and Northumberland make it incumbent upon him to take up his residence in the town of Cobourg. At the conclusion of the prayer meeting at St. Paul's last night he was presented with a beautiful cut glass water set accompanied by an address.

Judge Roger, since his childhood, has been connected with the church and Sunday school, and has been a useful worker and filled many responsible offices in both.

Rev. Robert Pogue, the pastor, opened the proceedings by an eulogistic reference to the guest of the evening. He called upon Mr. J. C. Shook to read the farewell address on behalf of the officers and members of the church, and to make the presentation to Judge Roger.

THE ADDRESS.

The address read as follows;—

Sir,—The pastor, elders, managers, members and adherents of St. Paul's Presbyterian church, desire to congratulate you on your recent appointment to the junior judgeship of of the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham.

From what we know of your past we believe you will discharge the duties of that important office with benefit to the people of the territory under your jurisdiction.

We also desire to congratulate you on your marriage, and sincerely hope that you and Mrs. Roger may realize all the happiness you anticipate from that important event.

We regret more than we can express that the duties now incumbent upon you force you to sever your connection with St. Paul's church, with which you have been identified from its beginning, being for many years one of its most prominent elders.

We unfeignedly trust that your new relations both as a citizen and a church member may be as cordial and as mutually beneficial as those of the old.

We also sincerely hope that we may occasionally have an opportunity of seeing you in our city and in our church, receiving the pleasant and hearty greetings of the past.

Signed on behalf of the congregation of St. Paul's church.

ROBERT POGUE,
Pastor.

Peterborough, Oct. 6, 1909.

A PROMINENT WORKER.

Addresses were also made by Sheriff Hall, on behalf of the Session and congregation, and by Mr. Madill, on behalf of the Sunday school, in which Judge Roger was deeply interested and a most helpful worker.

Following the address light refreshments were served and a pleasant hour spent, during which time those present personally said good-bye to Judge and Mrs. Roger and wished them all happiness in their new home.

Judge G. M. Roger is the last member of the family of the late Rev. J. Morrice Roger, who was the founder of St. Paul's church in Peterborough. Rev. J. Morrice Roger, M.A., was the son of a Scotch Presbyterian minister of Aberdeenshire, Scotland. He came to Canada in 1833. Soon after his arrival he proceeded to Peterborough. There was no church here, but the young minister soon gathered around him a flock of devoted followers, and laid the foundation for St. Andrew's church, and later became the pastor of St. Paul's church, which position he held for 40 years.

His Honor Judge Roger was born in Peterborough and lived here all his life. He is one of the best known men in the city and county, and the one characteristic which has marked his career has been his desire to assist in the uplifting of humanity. Not only was he always a prominent and earnest worker in St. Paul's church, but he was actively engaged in the Y.M.C.A., and every other institution and society which was for the moral betterment of the community. He is a man who has spent a very useful life here and has allowed no opportunity to go by to perform some duty for the city. As one of the municipal rulers he held a very prominent position, and in all walks of life he made himself felt, and in moving to Cobourg he leaves behind only friends, who will miss him and regret his departure.

BOUQUET FOR FIRE CHIEF AND THE CHIEF OF POLICE

Inspector of Insurance Company Commends Work Accomplished by Both Officials, Which Has Resulted in Improvement in the Conditions Which Have Existed in Back Yards.

Below will be found a letter received by Chief Howard from Inspector A. C. Stephenson, of the Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Company, one of the best known insurance companies doing business today. In explanation it might be stated that when Chief Howard first came here, the Underwriters complained to him that the inspectors had reported a very bad state of affairs in regard to the condition of back yards in Peterborough. With the co-operation of Chief Roszel, he investigated, and both officials have looked after the matter with a thoroughness that is highly commendable. This is an important work as it guards against outbreaks of fire and disease, and adds to the cleanliness of the city, and the citizens should, and no doubt do, appreciate it.

Toronto, Oct 5, 1909.

Chief Howard—
Peterborough, Ont

Dear Sir,—Don't forget to prepare a paper to read at the next meeting of the Fire Chiefs on the advantages of a clean town and how to go about it.

What the Chief of Police and yourself have done in Peterborough can be done in other places if the other Fire Chiefs and Chiefs of Police are of the same calibre. It is your duty in any case to tell all the other Fire Chiefs what you have accomplished along this line in your own town, and the means you took to do this work.

Yours truly,
A. C. STEPHENSON,
Inspector.

RECLAMATION OF NATIVES BY THE SALVATION ARMY

The Salvation Army is a far-reaching religious institution. It covers the widest ground in its various phases of religious endeavor, and one of its most important and useful departments is its missionary work. A most interesting review of the Army's missionary campaign in the West Indies and Isthmus of Panama was given last night in Bethany Tabernacle by Mrs. Watson, who, with Adjutant Watson, is stationed on the Isthmus of Panama.

In opening her address, Mrs. Watson took her listeners to the Barbadoes, Trinidad, British Guiana, Jamaica, the Isthmus of Panama and Costa Rica. She spoke very interestingly of the missionary work and the different institutions of the Army there, and spoke in the highest terms of the splendid assistance and encouragement given by the United States Government. The sanitary conditions were greatly improved by the Americans, and they have also greatly beautified the Isthmus.

In speaking of the Barbadoes Mrs. Watson told of the blessings to the people by being released from slavery in the emancipation which came into effect some six years ago, and dwelt on the mission of reaching the natives' hearts there and bringing them the message of true religion. Mrs. Watson said that although the work was being carried on under a great disadvantage in the countries to which she had referred, the Army had accomplished a great deal in the missionary cause, and had a most creditable record.

Besides the good results of the purely spiritual work, a great deal of good was being done at the Salvation Army Social Institution on the Isthmus, which was established for the purpose of providing lodging and rendering other material assistance to the destitute of all countries and denominations. The place was a haven for the unfortunate, and met a requirement that was made a vital one by the existing conditions.

At the conclusion of the address Mrs. Watson gave a beautifully-rendered recitation "Holy Communion," and it was thoroughly appreciated by the large audience.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs ? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

Don't Neglect SKIN DISEASE!

A WONDERFUL HEALER THAT DESTROYS DISEASE GERMS.

The worst forms of eczema, scalp disease, and blood-poisoning often begin as simple sores. Maybe the warning signal is a rough angry patch on the arm or thigh, or a pimply sore on the head. Don't neglect the first stages!

A sore finger-end or chapped knuckle has over and over again paved the way for serious disease. In the same way cuts and bruises have frequently led to blood-poisoning, festering, and obstinate sores. The reason is clear.

In the air around us and on our bodies are multitudes of tiny microbes, many of them "the advance guard" of infectious and contagious disease. So long as the skin is whole, the delicate tissues beneath are safe. Immediately the skin becomes unhealthy, and for an by a cut or small sore, these germs work down, contaminate the flesh, and provoke inflammation and disease.

Torture day and night, obstinate resistance of all ordinary methods of treatment, and a tendency of the sores to spread are amongst the penalties for neglecting skin-disease.

Eczema or blood-poisoning, once having gained a foothold, are each most difficult to get rid of. They bring to their victims nights of burning torture; or may even cost the amputation of a limb.

There is only one safe course. If a little Zam-Buk is applied promptly to the affected part, immediate attack is made upon these dangerous germs. Zam-Buk is famous for its antiseptic strength, its purity, and its unique herbal character. By the influence of this rare balm (which is entirely different from other ointments) the dangerous germs are killed and ejected from the tissues along with the [illegible] The flesh is thus [illegible] Zam-Buk, and completely purified.

Zam-Buk contains none of the rancid animal fats or mineral poisons found in many of the cheap, so-called ointments. On the contrary, Zam-Buk is a skilful combination of certain rare and valuable herbal juices—the outcome of patient experiment in most up-to-date laboratories and is truly the last word of science on the treatment of injuries and skin-diseases.

Mothers will find it an ideal balm for the delicate skins of young children; and in using it have the assurance that they are applying Nature's own healing essences. Zam-Buk is on a plane of its own. Nothing else is "just as good." Nothing at all approaches it. Ask for Zam-Buk and accept nothing else.

Zam-Buk is a sure and certain cure for piles, ringworm, festering sores, ulcers, bad leg, blood-poisoning, eczema, cuts, burns, sprains, bruises, scalds, sore heads, chapped hands, cold sores, chilblains, cold cracks, scalp sores, diseased ankles, and all other skin diseases and injuries. Rubbed well into the parts affected it cures neuralgia, rheumatism, and sciatica. All druggists and stores sell at 50 c. box, three for $1.25, and post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for prices.

Local Rugbyists are Getting Into Shape for Opening Game in Toronto

The Peterborough rugby team will play their first game in the senior O.R.F.U. in Toronto a week from Saturday, when they will meet the Parkdale Canoe Club. The locals are determined to bring home the bacon, and are practising steadily to get into shape. The lights have been installed at Riverside Park and workouts are being held every night. The players are turning out well, and it looks as if this year's fourteen will be about as strong as Peterborough ever had. Another practise will be held to-night at 7.30 o'clock, and every player is asked to be on hand sharp on time. Dr. MacPherson is coaching the boys and they are coming along nicely.

The annoyance caused by freight cars on Hamilton streets is regarded by aldermen as a breach of agreement by the radials.

SPORTING NOTES

At Paris, according to Auto, a sporting newspaper, James J. Jeffries has made the announcement that he would probably fight Jack Johnson for the heavyweight championship on April 10th or 11th at San Francisco.

Football players all remind us
We can see our foeman now
And departing leave behind us
Footprints on his noble brow.

Stanley Ketchel fights Jack Johnson 20 rounds a week from to-day at Colma, California. Ketchel says he is not a bit worried because Johnson is favorite at 10 to 4, and predicts that the odds will be much shorter when they meet.

The fact that Johnson refused to agree to a forty-five round bout is the chief reason for the prevailing odds, as it is believed on the coast that the negro will be satisfied to win on points. Ketchel says that as Johnson could not stop Kaufman in ten rounds the former will find it impossible to score a knockout in the coming mill.

"The shoe will be on the other foot," says the Michigan lion, "for Johnson will have all he can do to prevent me from putting him away." Willus Britt, who is talking night and day, declares that Ketchel will stop the big negro in jig time.

Harry Corbett, the Frisco sporting man, is said to have a $10,000 commission to place on Johnson.

There is a possibility of a baseball match being pulled off Saturday between the swatters of the old brigade and the City League champions.

The team to represent the P.C.I. at Port Hope on Saturday against the Trinity College school team, will be the same as last Saturday with the exception of two players who will be unable to make the trip.

The Park Street Athletic Club's new rooms will be opened on Friday evening, October 15th, and all young men are cordially invited to be present and enjoy the evening's entertainment, which will be exceedingly interesting.

Joe Quigley, of the champion Lakefield hockey team, is the authority for the statement that that village will not be represented in the City League this coming winter owing to the departure for other places of several of the players.

It is reported that the team to represent Knox church in the Church Hockey League this season will be much stronger than the team of last year, which was defeated by St. Andrew's in the final game for the championship.

There will be keen competition in the sports at Riverside Park to-morrow by the students of the Collegiate Institute. The students brought considerable credit to the institution by their splendid showing in the midsummer examinations, and they are equally proficient in the different branches of sport in which they participate after school hours.

PARTRIDGE MUST NOT BE KILLED OR TAKEN

It is not generally known, apparently, that it is illegal to shoot partridge because a man was seen shooting in a woods near Peterborough the other day. The law says no partridge shall be taken or killed till September, 1910. There is a heavy penalty attached to the illegal act of killing a bird of this kind, and the man who is wise will not attempt it.

VAGRANT IS ARRESTED

Alarmed Citizens Residing Near Jackson Park and They Complained to Police

A man with all the adornments of a vagrant, was arrested in Ashburnham to-day, and taken to the lockup. Citizens residing near Jackson Park, have been alarmed by the actions of a suspicious-looking character who has been loitering around the park, and they complained to the police, who took prompt action.

The prisoner says that he was in Toronto on Friday and boarded at 100 Front street. On Saturday and Sunday he stayed at a hotel at the corner of Duke and Frederick streets, but left there on Monday, going to Port Hope, then to Belleville, from which place he came to this city, and has remained here awaiting the arrival of some goods ordered from Toronto.

His case will be looked into to-mor-

TRAMP ARRESTED AT LINDSAY

The authorities at Lindsay have arrested a tramp, who gives his name as John Kainton, and Chief Vincent believes he has the man who committed the brutal assault on Mrs. McGinnis, of Mariposa, as he tallies with the description given of Mrs. McGinnis' assailant. He was given a preliminary hearing yesterday morning and was remanded for a week.

Mrs. McGinnis is still confined to her bed suffering from the shock, but will probably be able to attend court next week for the purpose of identifying the prisoner as the one who assaulted her, if he is the right man.

Chief Roszel received a communication from Chief Vincent to-day notifying him of the arrest, and stating that he would come to the city to take the suspect arrested here to Lindsay, if the one captured yesterday turns out to be the wrong man.

TRAMP CAUSES MUCH ALARM

The residents of Smith in the vicinity of the city are alarmed by the presence of a tramp who has been loitering around there for a short time. He has attempted no depredations yet, but they are constantly in fear that he will do so.

The city police were notified of his presence this afternoon.

NECKTIES WERE OFFERED AS THE SECURITY

A Peterborough doctor let a golden opportunity slip through his fingers one day this week. A son of Albion, who apparently was hardup, called on the medical man and wanted to borrow fifty cents and offered as security a half dozen neckties that had seen more or less service—principally more. The doctor is out the neckwear but in the fifty cents.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

BOARD FENCE CAUGHT FIRE

There was a small blaze on Aylmer street this afternoon, but no damage was done. It was caused by burning grass setting a board fence on the property of Mr. James Goode, on fire. Children playing with matches were the cause of the fire.

Imported Labor From Toronto.

Chicago, Oct. 7.—The Meyercord Co., lithographers, are on trial before Judge K. M. Landis, in the United States District Court, on the charge of importing contract labor. The company is said to have brought eleven laborers from Toronto in June, 1906, to take the places of strikers. There is a fine of $1,000 for each offence.

To Reach Pole by Balloon.

Friederichshafen, Oct. 7.—Prince Henry of Prussia, brother of Emperor William, presided at a meeting of persons interested in north polar research by means of a dirigible balloon. It was decided to organize a society to be known as the German society for the exploration of polar regions.

A Sudden Death.

Sault Ste. Marie, Oct. 7.—Harry Foster, employed at blast furnace No. 2, of the Lake Superior Corporation, was killed yesterday morning by a premature explosion of dynamite. May Get Medals.

Berlin, Oct. 7.—Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King has extended sympathy to the relatives and friends of the victims of the disaster at Extension, B.C., in a message to Ralph Smith, M.P., and has asked for the names of those who risked their lives in the hope of effecting a rescue, that they may be nominated for the King Edward medal.

3,000 Feet of Nets Confiscated.

Belleville, Oct. 7.—Capt. Hunter, fishery inspector, of this city, captured over 3,000 feet of fishing nets which were being used illegally at Weller's Bay.

Provincial Cities Dull.

When a man gets rich in Liverpool he goes to London to live. The same applies to the factorymen of Manchester. Both are good points in which to accumulate riches, London the place in which to dissipate the money. Consequently the society of these nearby cities is quiescent and devoid of brilliance; stupid for young people especially.

London's Subways.

London is underrun by a network of subways, or tubes to use the British name for an underground line. These roads have been constructed and are still owned and operated by wholly or partly independent companies. The lines cross and intersect at various points, making it possible by transfers to go almost anywhere underground. The total mileage constructed, authorized and projected is 145 1-2 miles, and the total authorized capital of the nine existing companies is $307,769,000.

Kept Him to the Rules.

Sir Frederick Thesiger, while engaged in the conduct of a case, objected to the irregularity of the counsel on the opposite side, who, in examining his witnesses, put leading questions.

"I have a right," answered the counsel, "to deal with my witnesses as I please."

"To that I offer no objection," retorted Sir Frederick; "you may deal as you like, but you shan't lead."

Did His Best.

A certain English mayor, whose period of office had come to an end, was surveying the work of the year. "I have endeavored," he said with an air of conscious rectitude, "to administer justice without swerving to partiality, on the one hand, or impartiality, on the other."

FOR THE LADY WHO CALLS

The lady who has a large circle of acquaintances always finds it a difficult matter to keep track of the reception days of her friends and often mistakes are made, that might have been avoided if care were taken to make a record of such days. And then there are the teas, at homes, and parties to be remembered too and when a hostess is planning an affair, she is always worried lest she overlook some one who has extended hospitality to her some time previous. To avoid these mistakes, a social register has been issued by the Review, that will be a boon to the busy lady. There are pages for each day of the month on which the record of the calls received and paid with the address of the visitor appear, then there are pages for social engagements, visits paid, addresses and memoranda, all of which prove very valuable data to have. These books are on sale at all the book stores and at the Review Office for 50 cents and there has already been a good demand for them.

"The Fighting Chance."

"Forgive me, Captain Selwyn," she said. "I am a child—a spoiled one—and I have proved it to you. Will you sit here beside me and tell me very gently what a fool I am to risk straining the friendship dearest to me in the whole world? And will you fix my penance?"

"You have fixed it yourself," he said.

"How?"

"By the challenge of your womanhood."

"I did not challenge."

"No; you defended. You are right. The girl I cared for—the girl who was there with me on Brier Water—so many, many centuries ago—the girl who, years ago, leaned there beside me on the sundial—has become a memory."

"What do you mean?" she asked faintly.

"Shall I tell you?"

"Yes."

"You will not be unhappy if I tell you?"

"N-no."

"Have you any idea what I am going to say, Eileen?"

She looked up quickly, frightened at the tremor in his voice.

"Don't—don't say it, Captain Selwyn!"

"Will you listen as a penance?"

"I—no, I cannot."

He said quietly: "I was afraid you could not listen. You see, Eileen, that, after all, a man does know when he is done for."

"Captain Selwyn!" She turned and caught his hands in both of hers, her eyes bright with tears. "Is that the penalty for what I said? Did you think I invited this?"

"Invited! No, child," he said gently. "I was fool enough to believe in myself; that is all. I have always been on the edge of loving you. Only in dreams did I ever dare set foot across that frontier. Now I have dared. I love you. That is all, and it must not distress you."

"But it does not," she said. "I have always loved you—dearly, dearly. Not in that way. I don't know how. Must it be in that way, Captain Selwyn? Can we not go on in the other way—that dear way which I—I have—almost spoiled? Must we be like other people—must sentiment turn it all to commonplace? Listen to me. I do love you. It is perfectly easy and simple to say it. But it is not emotional; it is not sentimental. Won't you take me for what I am and as I am—a girl, still young, devoted to you with all her soul, happy with you, believing implicitly in you, deeply, deeply sensible of your goodness and sweetness and loyalty to her? I am not a woman. I was a fool to say so. But you—you are so overwhelmingly a man that if it were in me to love—in that way—it would be you! Do you understand me? Or have I lost a friend? Will you forgive my foolish boast? Can you still keep me first in your heart, as you are in mine, and pardon in me all that I am not? Can you do these things because I ask you?"

"Yes," he said.

Chapter 19

GERALD came to Silverside two or three times during the early summer, arriving usually on Friday and always remaining until the following Monday morning.

All his youthful admiration and friendship for Selwyn had returned. That was plainly evident, and with it something less of callow self sufficiency. He did not appear to be as cocksure of himself and the world as he had been. There was less bumptiousness about him, less aggressive complacency. Somewhere and somehow somebody or something had come into collision with him, but who or what this had been he did not offer to confide in Selwyn, and the older man, dreading to disturb the existing accord between them, forbore to question him or invite, even indirectly, any confidence not offered. Selwyn and Eileen also noticed that he became very restless toward the end of his visits at Silverside, as though something in the city awaited him—some duty or responsibility not entirely pleasant.

There was, too, something of soberness, amounting at moments to discontented listlessness, not solitary brooding, for at such moments he stuck to Selwyn, following him about and remaining rather close to him, as though the elder man's mere presence was a comfort, even a protection.

So their relations remained during the early summer, and everybody supposed that Gerald's two weeks' vacation would be spent there at Silverside. Apparently the boy himself thought so, too, for he made some plans ahead, and Austin sent down a very handsome new motor boat for him.

Then at the last minute a telegram arrived saying that he had sailed for Newport on Neergard's big yacht. And for two weeks no word was received from him at Silverside.

One day in September Selwyn wrote Gerald, asking him to bring Edgerton Lawn and come down to Silverside for the purpose of witnessing some experiments with the new smokeless explosive, chaosite.

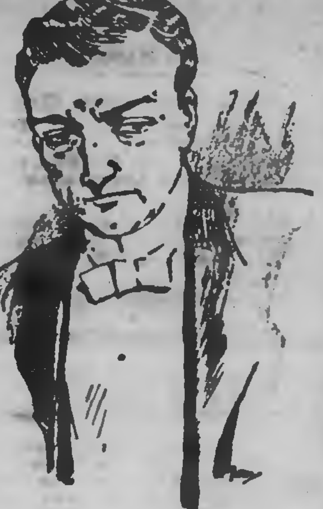
He did arrive, unusually pallid, almost haggard, and Selwyn, who met him at the station and drove him over from Wyossett, ventured at last to give the boy a chance.

But Gerald remained utterly unresponsive, stolidly so, and the other instantly relinquished the hope of any confidence at that time, shifting the conversation at once to the object and reason of Gerald's coming and gayly expressing his belief that the time was very near at hand when chaosite would figure heavily in the world's list of commercially valuable explosives.



Neergard.

It was early in August that Selwyn had come to the conclusion that his chaosite was likely to prove a commercial success. And now, in September, his experiments had advanced so far that he had ventured to invite Austin, Gerald, Lansing and Edgerton Lawn of the Lawn Nitro Powder company to witness a few tests at his cottage laboratory on Storm head, but at the same time he informed them with characteristic modesty that he was not yet prepared to guarantee the explosive.

He froze chaosite and boiled it and baked it and melted it and took all sorts of hair raising liberties with it, and after that he ground it to a powder, placed a few generous pinches in a small hand grenade and affixed a primer, the secret composition of which he alone knew. That was the key to the secret—the composition of the primer charge.

"I used to play baseball in college," he observed, smiling, "and I used to be a pretty good shot with a snowball."

They followed him to the cliff's edge, always with great respect for the awful stuff he handled with such apparent carelessness. There was a black, sea soaked rock jutting out above the waves. Selwyn pointed at it, poised himself and, with the long, overhand, straight throw of a trained ball player, sent the grenade like a bullet at the rock.

There came a blinding flash, a stunning, clean cut report—but what the others took to be a vast column of black smoke was really a pillar of dust—all that was left of the rock. And this slowly floated, settling like mist over the waves, leaving nothing where the rock had been.

"I think," said Edgerton Lawn, wiping the starting perspiration from his forehead, "that you have made good, Captain Selwyn. Dense or bulk, your chaosite and impact primer seem to do the business, and I think I may say that the Lawn Nitro Powder company is ready to do business too. Can you come to town tomorrow? It's merely a matter of figures and signatures now, if you say so. It is entirely up to you."

But Selwyn only laughed. He looked at Austin.

"I suppose," said Edgerton Lawn good naturedly, "that you intend to make us sit up and beg, or do you mean to absorb us?"

But Selwyn said: "I want more time on this thing. I want to know what it does to the interior of loaded shells and in fixed ammunition when it is stored for a year. I want to know whether it is necessary to use a solvent after firing it in big guns. As a bursting charge I'm practically satisfied with it, but time is required to know how it acts on steel in storage or on the bores of guns when exploded as a propelling charge. Meanwhile," turning to Lawn, "I'm tremendously obliged to you for coming—and for your offer. You see how it is, don't you? I couldn't risk taking money for a thing which might at the end prove dear at any price."

"I cheerfully accept that risk," insisted young Lawn. "I am quite ready to do all the worrying, Captain Selwyn."

But Selwyn merely shook his head, repeating, "You see how it is, don't you?"

Wm. Bradley, of Merriton, whose little daughter had a big toe cut off by a N. St. C. & T. car, is suing the company for damages.

The matter of business arrangements apparently ended then and there. Lawn's company sent several men to Selwyn and wrote him a great many letters—unlike the government, which had not replied to his briefly tentative suggestion that chaosite be conditionally examined, tested and considered.

So the matter remained in abeyance, and Selwyn employed two extra men and continued storage tests and experimented with rifled and smoothbore tubes, watchfully uncertain yet as to the necessity of inventing a solvent to neutralize possible corrosion after a propelling charge had been exploded.

Everybody in the vicinity had heard about his experiments. Everybody pretended interest, but few were sincere, and of the sincere few were unselfishly interested—his sister, Eileen, Drina and Lansing and maybe one or two others.

However, the younger set, now predominant from Wyossett to Wonder head, made up parties to visit Selwyn's cottage, which had become known as the Chrysalis, and Selwyn good naturedly exploded a pinch or two of the stuff for their amusement and never betrayed the slightest annoyance or boredom. In fact, he behaved so amiably during gratuitous interruptions that he won the hearts of the younger set, who presently came to the unanimous conclusion that there was romance in the air. And they sniffed it with delicate noses uptilted and liked the aroma.

One man, often the least suitable, is usually the unanimous choice of the younger sort where, in the disconcerting summer time, the youthful congregate in garrulous segregation.

Their choice they expressed frankly and innocently. They admitted cheerfully that Selwyn was their idol. But that gentleman remained totally unconscious that he had been set up by them upon the shores of the summer sea.

On the sunlit sands dozens of young people were hurling tennis balls at each other. Above the beach, under the long pavilions, sat mothers and chaperons. Motors, beach carts and victorias were still arriving to discharge gayly dressed fashionables, for the hour was early, and up and down the inclined wooden walk leading from the bathing pavilion to the sands a constant procession of bathers passed with nod and gesture of laughing salutation, some already retiring to the showers after a brief ocean plunge, the majority running down to the shore, eager for the first frosty and aromatic embrace of the surf rolling in under a cloudless sky of blue.

As Eileen Erroll emerged from the surf and came wading shoreward through the seething shallows she caught sight of Selwyn sauntering across the sands toward the water and halted, knee deep, smilingly expectant, certain that he had seen her.

Gladys Orchil, passing her, saw Selwyn at the same moment, and her clear ringing salute and slender arm aloft arrested his attention, and the next moment they were off together, swimming toward the sponson canoe which Gerald had just launched with the assistance of Sandon Craig and Scott Innis.

For a moment Eileen stood there motionless. Knee high the flat ebb boiled and hissed, dragging at her stockinged feet as though to draw her seaward with the others. Yesterday she would have gone without a thought to join the others, but yesterday is yesterday. It seemed to her as she stood there that something disquieting had suddenly come into the world, something unpleasant, but indefinite, yet sufficient to leave her vaguely apprehensive.

Somebody threw a tennis ball at her. She caught it and hurled it in return, and for a few minutes the white, felt covered balls flew back and forth from scores of graceful, eager hands. A moment or two passed when no balls came her way. She turned and walked to the foot of a dune and seated herself cross legged on the hot sand, her serious, beautiful eyes fixed steadily on a distant white spot—the sponson canoe where Gladys and Selwyn sat, their paddle blades flashing in the sun.

How far away they were! Gerald was with them. Curious that Selwyn had not seen her waiting for him, knee deep in the surf—curious that he had seen Gladys instead! True, Gladys had called to him and signaled him, white arm upflung. Gladys was very pretty—with her heavy, dark hair and melting, Spanish eyes and her softly rounded, olive skinned figure. Gladys had called to him, and she had not. That was true, and lately—for the last few days or perhaps more—she herself had been a trifle less impulsive in her greeting of Selwyn—a little less sans facon with him. After all, a man comes when it pleases him. Why should a girl call him—unless she—unless—unless—

Perplexed, her grave eyes were fixed on the sea where now the white canoe pitched nearer, close on now.

When the canoe suddenly capsized, Gladys jumped, but Selwyn went with it, boat and man tumbling into the tumult over and over. As Eileen looked she saw a dark streak leap across his face—saw him stoop and wash it off and stand, looking blindly about, while again the sudden dark line crisscrossed his face from temple to chin and spread wider like a stain.

"Philip!" she called, springing to her feet and scarcely knowing that she had spoken.

He heard her and came toward her in a halting, dazed way, stopping twice to cleanse his face of the bright blood that streaked it.

"It's nothing," he said. "The infernal thing hit me. Oh, don't use that!" as she drenched her kerchief in cold sea water and held it toward him with both hands.

"Take it, I—I beg of you," she stammered. "Is it s-serious?"

"Why, no," he said, his senses clearing. "It was only a rap on the head, and this blood is merely a nuisance. Thank you; I will use your kerchief if you insist. It'll stop in a moment anyway."

"Please sit here," she said—"here where I've been sitting."

He did so, muttering: "What a nuisance! It will stop in a second. You needn't remain here with me, you know. Go in. It is simply glorious."

"I've been in. I was drying my hair."

He glanced up, smiling; then, as the wet kerchief against his forehead reddened, he started to rise, but she took it from his fingers, hastened to the water's edge, rinsed it and brought it back cold and wet.

"Please sit perfectly still," she said. "A girl likes to do this sort of thing for a man."

"If I'd known that," he laughed, "I'd have had it happen frequently."

She only shook her head, watching him unsmiling. But the pulse in her had become very quiet again.

"It's no end of fun in that canoe," he observed. "Gladys Orchil and I work it beautifully."

"I saw you did," she nodded.

"Oh! Where were you? Why didn't you come?"

"I don't know. Gladys called you. I was waiting for you—expecting you. Then Gladys called you."

"I didn't see you," he said.

"I didn't call you," she observed serenely, and after a moment she added, "Do you see only those who hail you, Captain Selwyn?"

"So do I," she said. "Please hail me after this—because I don't care to take the initiative. If you neglect to do it, don't count on my hailing you any more."

The stain spread on the kerchief. Once more she went to the water's edge, rinsed it and returned with it.

"I think it has almost stopped bleeding," she remarked as he laid the cloth against his forehead. "You frightened me, Captain Selwyn. I am not easily frightened."

"I know it."

"Did you know I was frightened?"

"Of course I did."

"Oh," she said, vexed, "how could you know it? I didn't do anything silly, did I?"

"No; you very sensibly called me Philip. That's how I knew you were frightened."

"So I was silly, after all," she said, biting at her under lip and trying to meet his humorous gray eyes with unconcern. But her face was burning now, and, aware of it, she turned her gaze resolutely on the sea. Also, to her further annoyance, her heart awoke, beating unwarrantably, absurdly, until the dreadful idea seized her that he could hear it. Disconcerted, she stood up—a straight, youthful figure against the sea. The wind, blowing her disheveled hair across her cheeks and shoulders, fluttered her clinging skirts as she rested both hands on her hips and slowly walked toward the water's edge.

"Shall we swim?" he asked her.

She half turned and looked around and down at him.

"I'm all right. It's stopped bleeding. Shall we?" he inquired, looking at her.

She said, feeling suddenly stupid and childish and knowing she was speaking stupidly: "Would you not rather join Gladys again? I thought that—that"—

"Thought what?"

"Nothing," she said, furious at herself. "I am going to the showers. Goodby."

"Goodby," he said, troubled. "Unless we walk to the pavilion together"—

"But you are going in again—are you not?"

"Not unless you do."

"W-what have I to do with it, Captain Selwyn?"

"It's a big ocean and rather lonely without you," he said so seriously that she looked around again and laughed.

"It's full of pretty girls just now. Plunge in, my melancholy friend. The whole ocean is a dream of fair women today."

"If they be not fair to me, what care I how fair they be?" he paraphrased, springing to his feet and keeping step beside her.

"Really, that won't do," she said. "The moonlight and Gladys and the Minster twins convict you. Do you remember that I told you one day in the summer that Sheila and Dor[illegible] and Gladys would mark you for [illegible]r own? Oh, my inconstant courtier, [illegible] are yonder! And I absolve you. [illegible]"

"Do you remember what I told you one day in early summer?" he returned coolly.

"[illegible] talk this way!" she said, excited under a rush of sensations [illegible] incomprehensible—stinging confused emotions that beat chaotic time to the clamor of her pulses. "Why d-do you speak of such things?" she repeated, with a fierce little indrawn breath. "Why do you—when you know—when I said—explained everything?" She looked at him fearfully. "You are somehow spoiling our friendship," she said. "And I don't exactly know how you are doing it, but something of the comfort of it is being taken away from me, and don't, don't, don't do it!"

She covered her eyes with her clinched hands for a moment, motionless; then her arms dropped, and she turned sharply, with a gesture which left him alone there, and walked rapidly across the beach to the pavilion.

Chapter 20

LUNCHEON being the children's hour, Miss Erroll's silence remained unnoticed in the jolly uproar. Besides, Gerald and Boots were discussing the huge house party, lantern fete and dance which the Orchils were giving that night for the younger sets, and Selwyn, too, seemed to take unusual interest in the discussion, though Eileen's part in the conference was limited to an occasional nod or monosyllable.

Drina was wild to go and furious at not having been asked, but when Boots offered to stay home she resolutely refused to accept the sacrifice.

"No," she said; "they are pigs not to ask girls of my age, but you may go, Boots, and I'll promise not to be unhappy."

Mrs. Gerard gave the rising signal, and Selwyn was swept away in the rushing herd of children out on the veranda, where for awhile he smoked and drew pictures for the younger Gerards. Later some of the children were packed off for a nap; Billy with his assorted puppies went away with Drina and Boots, ever hopeful of a fox or rabbit; Nina Gerard curled herself up in a hammock, and Selwyn seated himself beside her, an uncut magazine on his knees. Eileen had disappeared.

For awhile Nina swung there in silence, her pretty eyes fixed on her brother. He had nearly finished cutting the leaves of the magazine before she spoke, mentioning the fact of Rosamund Fane's arrival at the Minsters' house, Brookminster.

The slightest frown gathered and passed from her brother's sun bronzed forehead, but he made no comment.

For awhile Nina swung there in silence.

"Mr. Neergard is a guest, too," she observed.

"What!" exclaimed Selwyn in disgust.

"Yes; he came ashore with the Fanes."

ROBERT FAIR & CO., LIMITED

WEALTH OF OTONABEE WAS DISPLAYED AT KEENE FAIR

BY STAFF REPRESENTATIVE.

Keene, Oct. 6.—Nearly two thousand people were in attendance at the annual fair of the Otonabee Agricultural Society here to-day. They came from all directions and had an afternoon of rare enjoyment. Old friendships were renewed and new ones formed, events of interest which have happened since various persons last met were discussed, the exhibits were viewed, compared and commented upon, and the afternoon passed all too quickly. This year's display surpassed all previous ones, both in number, in attendance and quality of the exhibits. There were nearly 2,000 paid admissions, the gate receipts being $25 more than last year. The total number of entries was 1,032, as compared with 918 for 1908, an increase of 114. Secretary Shearer has been a busy man for several weeks past and his work was well done. The other officers and the directors of the society deserve great credit for the splendid arrangements made and for the satisfactory manner in which everything was carried out.

The weather conditions were perfect and this no doubt, had considerable to do with the large attendance. Peterborough sent a large contingent and almost every point in the county was represented.

The steamers Rainbow, Monarch and Mermaid brought in excursions from Rice Lake points and two private launches also conveyed 75 or a 100 persons to the fair.

Music was supplied by the West Alnwick band. Two or three refreshment booths did a lively business and brightened the appearance of the grounds.

There were several Peterborough entries in the classes for carriage horses, and a number of the prizes went to the Electric City. The exhibit of horses was one of the features of the fair. There were many fine turnouts and the judges had frequently a hard task to pick the best. Their work, however, was very satisfactory.

Cattle, sheep and pigs were fully as good as in past years and the poultry exhibit was perhaps better than last year.

THE MAIN BUILDING.

The display in the main building was commented upon as one of the best in years. Every class was well filled and the quality of the exhibits was considerably above the average. There were pumpkins bigger than a man imagines his head is after a night of revelry and some of the field roots looked like young saw logs. There was a very creditable display of hothouse and cut flowers and those of aesthetic taste lingered long in that section. The fine arts department had a nice collection of oils and pencil drawings, marked ability being shown in several instances. The fancy work section was the centre of interest for many of the ladies and they found much there to admire and pass comment upon. The department devoted to domestic manufactures was a credit to the ladies of Otonabee. Homemade bread and buns, which were prominent in one section showed that the culinary art is receiving much attention.

There was an extensive exhibit of vegetables and it was generally remarked that potatoes were unusually good. There has been a splendid crop of field roots in Otonabee this year and the gardens have also yielded abundantly. The exhibit of grain was also well up to that of former years.

Fruit formed a very attractive exhibit, apples being especially fine.

A special exhibit consisted of two collections of noxious weeds, the work of Miss Lulu Kent and Miss Beatrice Scriver. Each weed was named and the gathering and tabulation of the data must have required much skill and time.

Buggies and cutters formed an interesting exhibits and there were also two special exhibits of pianos.

The skating rink serves for a main admirably, being spacious and well lighted. There was plenty of music in the main hall.

EXCITING RACES.

The followers of the turf were numerous and they had good sport provided for them in the free-for-all and green race. The track, which is a third of a mile, or nearly that, was in good shape and every heat was well contested. The dust kicked up made it hard for the drivers, but they showed good head-work and there were no accidents. The results were as follows:

'Tom Tariff,' Chas. Elmhirst	1	1	1
'May Sphinx,' Dr. Pinkinghorn	2	3	2
'Molly O,' Dr. Murphy	3	2	4
'Billy,' Dr. T. Johnston	4	4	3
'Minnie M.' R. Cavanagh	5	5	5

FREE-FOR-ALL

'Barbow Brooks,' H. and W. Elmhirst	1	3	1	1
'Lulu Chimes,' E. W. Jones	2	1	2	3
'Henry Direct,' Dr. T. Johnston	3	2	3	2

PARKER'S NICE RUNNING.

The mile foot race added variety to the programme, and it was watched with keen interest. There were three entries and they were all "Billies":—'Billy' Parker, of Hiawatha; 'Billy' Edwards of Keene, and 'Billy' Smoke, Alderville. Edwards set a hot pace at the start and one of the spectators was heard to remark that setting the pace early was one of Billy's faults. Parker overhauled him and opened up quite a gap before the finish was reached. Edwards was a good second and Smoke was third. The time was 4.15, but the distance was less than a mile.

Below will be found part of the entry list. The prize list will be published later:

SPECIAL EXHIBITS

GRAFTON & CO.

Among the special exhibits that attracted much attention was that of Grafton and Co., clothiers, etc., 381 George street, Peterborough. High grade clothing for men is this firm's specialty and their display at Keene was enough to convince the ordinary man, or extraordinary man, for that matter, that he could not go to a better place to replenish his wardrobe. Grafton and Co's. clothing has a reputation behind it and it possesses the quality to back up the high opinion in which it is held by the public. The latest style in ready-to-wear clothing are always in stock and when you buy a suit of Grafton's you can rest assured that it is right up to the minute. The people of Keene and Otonabee will always find a cordial welcome awaiting them at the Grafton store in Peterborough.

THE GOURLAY PIANO.

Messrs. Fife and Carroll, of Peterborough, agents for the Gourlay piano, had a splendid instrument on exhibition in the main building, and it attracted much attention. The beauty of tone of the piano was demonstrated by a skilled pianiste who played a varied repertoire of selections during the afternoon. The Gourlay piano is manufactured by Gourlay, Winter and Leeming, of Toronto, and in every detail of construction as well as in its durability and its perfect mechanical and tonal qualities, it is an exponent of the highest attainable excellence in the art of piano building, and as such is endorsed and guaranteed by the manufacturers. That the Gourlay piano made an impression at the Keene Fair was evidenced by the fact that the one on exhibition was sold before the day was over.

Fife and Carroll are dealers in pianos, organs and player-pianos and should be consulted before purchasing. Call at 438 Mark street, Peterborough, or telephone 735.

LANG & MAHER.

There would be considerable surprise expressed at the Keene fair if Lang and Maher, of Peterborough, did not have an exhibit on the grounds. The "Daylight Store" at 409-411, George street, is well known to the people of Keene and Otonabee and they always pay much attention to this firm's exhibit at the annual fair. Their exhibit at this year's exhibition was a very attractive one, the latest styles in men's clothing being shown. Nothing but the best brands of clothing are carried and as a result there is always a strong demand for Lang and Maher suits. They are worn by hundreds in Peterborough city and county and are giving the highest satisfaction. The people of Otonabee are reminded that Lang and Maher's is the headquarters for men's furnishings and clothing in Peterborough.

OTTAWA POLICE ARE HOT ON THE TRAIL OF CROOKS

One Has Been Captured—Escaped Burglars From Michigan Have Been Operating in Eastern Canada—Raid Had Been Plotted Out.

Ottawa, Oct. 8.—The recent arrest of a suspected safe-blower, giving the name of Thomas Gorman, revealed to the Ottawa police the fact that a raid on Canadian cities had been planned by a gang of three American crooks, noted safe-crackers, who, on July 6, escaped from the Mount Clemens, Mich., prison. A reward of $1,500 is offered for their re-capture.

Three weeks ago, a letter addressed to a man named Graham, to be called for at Hull postoffice, was accidentally placed in the postal box of Dr. Graham of Hull, who, without looking at the address, opened and read it. It was found to be a communication from a woman in Toledo, congratulating the person addressed on his escape from prison and telling him to meet the other two members of the gang at Hull. The letter was turned over to the Ottawa police.

The local department at once wired Toledo, and in the meantime the Hull postoffice was watched. In a day or so a young man appeared and asked if a man had called for a letter addressed to him—Graham. He was shadowed and arrested by the Ottawa detectives. He gave the name of Thos. Gorman, and was remanded for a week on a charge of vagrancy.

In the meantime, Ottawa was straining every effort to stir up Toledo. The postmark on the letter was blurred, and only by hard work was it finally made out. It was declared to have been sent from a small Michigan town, and this gave the first clue. The Michigan authorities were wired to hustle, but neither Toledo nor Michigan got busy in time, and after two weeks Gorman was discharged from custody here.

He had only been gone two hours when Michigan authorities reached here. They followed him to Montreal, but missed him.

Yesterday morning a party started out from Hull to co-operate with Dominion Constables Marcou, Foster and Giroux in hunting down a quartette of burglars who dynamited a safe at Ellard's store and postoffice at Pickanock, Que., last Sunday night, and Wright, Que., postoffice on Monday night. At 1 o'clock yesterday morning the three Dominion constables came across four armed men hiding near a railway track at North Wakefield. They pounced on them and several shots were fired. They got one man, but the others got away, firing back at the officers several times.

The man arrested had on a new suit, had $100 in cash and a quantity of stamps, and proved to be German. He also had a complete set of appliances peculiar to the art of safe-blowing, including dynamite caps, fuses and a candle.

Boys after cows near Wright Village early yesterday morning saw three men in the woods, and it is thought these are the others wanted. The district is a wild one.

BRIG.-GEN. BUCHAN DEAD PASSED AWAY AT MONTREAL

Well-Known Canadian Officer Who Has Been for Some Time Commander of the Quebec Division of the Canadian Forces, Passes Away.

Montreal, Oct. 8.—The death took place yesterday morning of Brigadier-General Lawrence Buchan, C.M.G., commander of the Quebec division of the Canadian forces, at the Royal Victoria Hospital, where he was removed a few days ago, suffering from a severe attack of pleuro-pneumonia, from which it was realized a couple of days ago he could not recover. Mrs. and Miss Buchan and Lieut.-Col. Dunbar were at the bedside when death came.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon at two o'clock, from the hospital chapel, to Mount Royal Cemetery. A full turnout of militia forces of the district has been ordered, and there will be military delegations from others sections of the Dominion.

"Fighting Larry" was the nickname by which the late Gen. Buchan was popularly known, for in his long military career he had considerable active service. He was born near Paris, Ont., Jan. 29, 1847, and was educated at U.C.C. In the 70's he was in partnership with J. L. Blaikie, in the insurance business, and from January, 1871-7 was a member of the Toronto Stock Exchange.

He transferred his seat to his brother, Ewing Buchan, who became a partner with C. S. Gzowski, under the style name of Gzowski & Buchan. For many years the late general was a welcome guest at the Christmas festival at the exchange.

In 1872 he joined the Queen's Own Rifles as ensign, became captain in 1874, and adjutant in 1875. In 1881 he moved west and became adjutant of the 90th Regiment, Winnipeg, serving with that corps in the Riel Rebellion. At Batoche his horse was shot beneath him. He was promoted to major in August, 1885, was appointed captain of the mounted infantry permanent force at Winnipeg. Later, with the Royal Canadian Regiment (infantry) he served at Fredericton, N.B., Toronto, and St. Johns, Que. In 1895 he became lieutenant-colonel. He took a long staff course in England in the three arms of the reserve.

In 1899, while at Stanley Barracks, he was appointed second in command of the first South African contingent and won high praise for his conduct in the field. For a while he was in charge of the Transvaal convalescent depot of the imperial forces. In 1900 he was honored with the C.M.G.

While in Toronto during the absence of Gen. Otter, he commanded the troops called out during the street car strike, and for the riots at Sault Ste. Marie. In 1905 he was given the Quebec command and last year was gazetted brigadier-general.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL PIPES OF NOVA SCOTIA IS DEAD

Halifax, N.S., Oct. 8.—News was received here last night of the sudden death in Boston yesterday of Attorney-General Pipes. Mr. Pipes had been recently in the Canadian West attending a forestry convention in the interests of the Nova Scotia Government, and was on his way home, when stricken with an apopletic stroke.

For some three decades Mr. Pipes occupied a leading position in public affairs of the province. He was a man of ability and of kindly disposition, and was the father-in-law of E. N. Rhodes, M.P., whose father died only a few days ago.

Hon. W. T. Pipes paid a visit to Toronto in July last to consult Prof. Fernow of Toronto University in regard to reforestration in Nova Scotia, on which occasion he was the guest at a luncheon at the university.

He was born on April 15, 1850, and married in 1876, Ruth Eliza M'Elmon, who predeceased him in 1894.

Educated at Acadia College, Amherst, and for some time head master of Sydney Royal Academy, he was called to the Bar in 1875, made a Q.C. in 1890, and entered the Legislature in 1882. From 1882 to 1884 he was Premier of the province. He was judge of probates for Cumberland in 1887. From 1898 to 1906 he sat in the Legislature council as a member of the Administration, and leader in the Upper House. In 1905 he became Commissioner of Public Works and Mines. Since 1906 he had sat in the Legislative Assembly as member for Cumberland.

PRIEST MUST NOT DISCUSS STRIKE

Montreal, Oct. 8.—L'Acton Sociale, the organ of the Roman Catholic Church in this province, announces that Mgr. Sbarretti, the apostolic delegate, has made a request on Father Fraser of Glace Bay, N.S., for a statement regarding his comments from the pulpit on the coal miners' strike and has been forbidden to discuss the matter in his church in the future.

Farmer Breaks Neck.

Thamesford, Oct. 8.—A tragedy occurred yesterday morning. Bartholomew Presley, aged 74, of Kintore, was plowing with the lines buckled around his waist. The bolt pulled out of the doubletree and he was pulled over the plow handles. He alighted on his head, breaking his neck.

A Rifle Record.

Washington, Oct. 8.—The world's rifle shooting record on a 200-yards' range, was equalled yesterday by Lieut. Charles M. Putnam, district of Columbia National Guard, retired, who scored 47 hits out of a possible 50.

TO LOOK INTO OSTEOPAPHY

Toronto, Oct. 8.—The Court of Appeal will be asked to decide whether the practice of osteopathy comes under the direction of the Ontario medical council. This will be the outcome of proceedings taken by the council in the Police Court yesterday against Dr. Robert B. Henderson, 189 Cottingham street, for an alleged breach of the medical act. For the defence it was urged that the practice had nothing to do with medicine, and consequently fell without the provision of the act. A stated case will be agreed upon and sent higher up.

State Used Durum Wheat.

Grand Fork, N.D., Oct 8.—In compliance with a proclamation of Governor Burke, North Dakotans yesterday ate durum wheat only. The proclamation was issued in compliance with a request of the grain growers of North and South Dakota and Minnesota for the purpose of establishing durum as a bread grain. All bread and wheat foods are made of durum.

SPANISH ARTILLERY

Madrid, Oct. 7.—It is officially announced that the Spanish troops occupied Mount Guruzu, Morocco.

The ascent of the mountain and its occupation was effected without resistance. The troops saluted the raising of the flag with prolonged cheering.

DREAM PREVENTS TRAIN DISASTER

Montreal, Oct. 8.—According to the story of one of the passengers, a dream of a boy prevented the Vancouver express, which arrived here yesterday morning six hours late, from meeting with disaster. The train was delayed by a burned bridge between Winnipeg and Brandon. The little son of the sectionman dreamed he saw the train wrecked, and the dream so impressed the father that he walked ten miles to the bridge and found it burned down by prairie fires. He flagged the train.

London, Oct. 8.—Harry Benson of Brooklyn, whose real name is Bebra, has been sentenced to five years' penal servitude for fraud in connection with the bankruptcy of the Felthams' Bank, which he founded. It was also adduced that he had swindled 18,000 persons by means of the International Securities Corporation.

BANK OF ENGLAND HAS MADE ADVANCE IN RATE

London, Oct. 8.—The governors of the Bank of England yesterday raised the minimum discount rate from 2 1-2 per cent. to 3 per cent. This is the first change since the first day of last April, when it was reduced from 3 per cent.

It was decided to raise the rate to 3 per cent. owing to the large inroads on the bank's reserve already made by exports to Egypt, which were necessary for the financing of the cotton crop, and the Argentine withdrawals. The Government were unable to offset these by fresh arrivals from the mines owing to the sustained demand from Russia, which absorbed available quantities week after week, preventing the bank from building up the reserve. A fresh element in the situation, however, undoubtedly helping the directors in their decision, is Wednesday's decline in New York exchange on London, the recent sharp rise in money and the calling of loans in New York, which will probably necessitate the withdrawal of gold for that quarter against finance paper, which has been placed here some time ago and the number of fresh bills still coming forward. The higher rate, although it was expected soon, was not generally looked for to-day.

WATERLOO WANTS NEW TELEPHONES

Waterloo, Ont., Oct. 8.—Waterloo is negotiating with an independent telephone company for the installation of a system in that town. There have been considerable dissatisfaction owing to the Bell Telephone Co. discontinuing the central office at Waterloo, combining it with that at Berlin.

A difficulty, however, has been met with, in the exclusive franchise the Bell people have in Berlin. This franchise will not expire for another two years, and it is doubtful whether it would pay to install a new system with Berlin's doors closed.

Hon. Dr. Pyne will open the new hall at the Carnegie Library in Waterloo next Wednesday evening.

Toronto "Vag" Sentenced.

Kingston, Oct. 8.—Robt. Carruthers, Toronto, was given a month for vagrancy. He played a fake game, claiming he had a broken arm, and threatened to shoot citizens who refused his call for money.

Library Officials Resign.

Chatham, Oct. 8.—At a meeting of the library board J. W. Humphrey and Secretary W. J. Twohey simultaneously resigned their positions and refused to give reasons.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

There will be no decision as regards modifying the constitution of Queen's University, Kingston, until the convocation next April.

While playing about a rain barrel, Daniel, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Munro, of Winnipeg, fell in and was drowned on Wednesday night.

More than 750,000 prairie dogs have been killed by J. W. Holman, the officially recognized U. S. Government poisoner of the pests in the southwestern states, during the last eight months.

J. M. Barrie, the novelist and playwright, has entered action for divorce against his wife, who was Mary Ansel, an actress. They were married in 1894, and were always regarded as a happy couple.

After sending a note to his friend, Dr. E. Birdsell, T. F. Tetley, former golf champion of England, and for several years a wealthy broker of San Francisco, shot himself in his office. He feared insanity.

A dense fog that interrupted river navigation Wednesday night at Detroit and caused several street car collisions early yesterday, resulted in the death of an unidentified boy, who was run over by an automobile.

The old-fashioned Lord Mayor's show, one of the most picturesque functions to be witnessed in England, will be abandoned by the new Lord Mayor-elect of London, who proposes to have a military and naval display.

All the shops of Belgrade were closed yesterday and the public buildings of the city were draped in black to mark the first anniversary of the annexation of the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Austria-Hungary.

A heavy thunder storm visited Winnipeg early yesterday morning. Reports show that rain was more or less general all through the three prairie provinces. It was the first downpour for a month and will extinguish the bush and prairie fires.

HOT ROAST FOR THE DETECTIVES

Toronto, Oct. 8.—In the course of the action of Richard Ford to recover $5,000 damages to character against the Canadian Express Co. for false arrest, Chief Justice Mulock took a fling at the detective department for their methods of cross-examining prisoners before they have had a chance to consult counsel. He thought the Attorney-General's attention should be called to it.

Manager Charles Miller of the company testified that it was the crown, not the company that directed the arrest and prosecution of Ford. Mr. Miller did not swear the information against the accused until Detective Mackie had told him to do so. Personally he had not known Ford. The jury were addressed by both counsel before adjournment last evening. The judge will charge this morning.

BUDGET MEANS HOME RULE

London, Oct. 8.—The King is still trying to prevent a crisis, and yesterday had another consultation with Premier Asquith.

As time passes the difficulties toward avoiding a conflict between the Commons and the Lords increases, the strong party men of both sides being eager for the fight.

The Unionists, are urging the leaders to do nothing that might prevent an immediate appeal to the people. They have seized upon Mr. Redmond's statement that the last obstacle to home rule would have gone with the disappearance of the veto of the House of Lords, and are declaring that a vote for the budget is a vote for home rule.

WILL ASK MONEY FOR CANADIAN NAVY

Ottawa, Oct. 8.—The legislation to be submitted to the House next session providing for a Canadian navy will be introduced as "The Naval Defence Act." It will provide for twelve vessels of the cruiser and destroyer types, nine of which will be probably placed on the Atlantic and three on the Pacific coast. The total capital expenditure will exceed twenty million dollars, and the annual outlay will be something over three millions. Negotiations as to training ships and docks are still in progress.

Other legislation will include bills to amend the bank act, to amend the insurance act, to consolidate the immigration act, to ratify the French treaty, and it is hoped a bill for the reduction of cable rates.

CHINESE PORK IS DISEASED

London, Oct. 8.—Nine per cent. of the carcases of Chinese hogs recently imported into England, and thus far inspected by the sanitary committee of the city of London, have been found to be affected with tuberculosis.

The first shipment of 5,000 hogs was brought from China in a refrigerating ship, and sold well in the wholesale market. Although they were offered by the retail butchers at 25 per cent. below the prices charged for other imported hogs, they did not find favor, and the butchers were obliged to raise the price of American and European pork, to dispose of the Chinese stock. The steamship company, which endeavored to introduce the Chinese pork, was of the opinion that it would prove, owing to its cheapness, a strong competitor with frozen beef and mutton.

Singularly Clean Election.

Charlottetown, P.E.I., Oct. 8.—The Chief Justice and Justice Fitzgerald delivered judgment in the election petition presented by L. P. Tapten of this city, against L. E. Prowse, M.P., one of the members for Queen's County.

The Chief Justice dismissed the petition with costs and said: "We are of the opinion that the conduct of election was singularly free from violence of the law. The conduct of the respondent was entirely blameless."

CONGO PROBLEM RAISED BIG MOVEMENT STARTED

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and E. D. Morel Will Head a Crusade in England to Wake People up to the Atrocities Being Practiced.

London, Eng., Oct. 8.—Sir A. Conan Doyle and E. D. Morel have placed themselves at the head of a movement in the United Kingdom for the purpose of making the public realize the situation in the Congo and to arouse public opinion and thus force Government action. Sir A. Conan Doyle has just returned from Gibraltar. Seen at his Sussex home he said:

"We are going to hold a series of great public meetings in all parts of the kingdom in order to bring the facts of the present reign of terror and atrocious misgovernment in the Congo. The first Congo reform meeting will be at Newcastle Nov. 8, followed by a great mass meeting in London on Nov. 19. All the religious denominations will be united in this movement in the interest of humanity.

"When the people of England know the facts and have heard the statements of eye-witnesses and seen the photographs of mutilated men, women and children, I am sure they will rise with us and put an end to these crimes.

"The Government cannot do anything effectual until the people of the country are enlightened as to the real horrors, and stand behind the Government as a driving force. I wish the public to co-operate and call for an end of this long orgy of blood, lust and greed.

"I have a photograph of a poor black child, with a mutilated hand and leg. We stand for the murdered and maimed men, women and children of the Congo, and this is a heart call to the men and women of England. This country took a most solemn pledge when the Congo Free State was created, and one article of that treaty was that we bound ourselves in the name of the Almighty God with a solemn oath to watch over the preservation of the native race, and the amelioration of the moral and material conditions of their existence.

"What have we done to keep that oath. Millions of natives have been wiped out, and many others maimed and hacked and tormented without any civilised power raising a hand to save them.

"It is a significant fact that the heraldic shield of Antwerp, to which city most of the rubber from the Congo is sent, contains a bloody hand, severed at the wrist. Mr. Harris, the secretary of the Congo Reform Association, has been a missionary for many years in the Congo. When asked to give evidence before a commission he had the records of a thousand murders to prove his accusations.

"A third of the whole population of the Congo, which formerly contained thirty million people, he said, has disappeared under Leopold's regime. Great towns of fifty and sixty thousand inhabitants have vanished. The question now is: Are cold-blooded and infamous men to continue to make capital out of suffering and misery?"

RUSTON IS ACQUITTED ON A SERIOUS CHARGE

Brampton, Oct. 8.—After exactly one hour's deliberation, the jury at 10 o'clock last night returned a verdict of "not guilty" of the charge against Frank Ruston of burning his house for the insurance. The charge of Justice MacMahon was favorable to the prisoner on nearly all points.

Ruston, in his own behalf, told the whole story of the fire, saying that when he was awakened the kitchen, parlor and hall were all on fire. He caught up his child, rolled her in quilts, and, with one blow from a chair, smashed the window. The room was thick with smoke. The child was partly stupified. He carried her to a cutter, some distance from the house, returned to the room and gathered up the remainder of the bedding, the feather tick and mattress, together with his clothing and the valise which contained his child's clothes. He then rushed to a closet off the room, took out a box of 20 inches square, which was full of heavy china, and got it out.

He said Dixon Rutherford was mistaken in saying that there was no cutter there, and that the child was seated on a mattress, and that he also was in error when he said Ruston told him he smashed in the cellar door and took china out that way.

GAS TRUST PLANNED IN WESTERN ONTARIO

Chatham, Ont., Oct. 8.—Arrangements are under way for the formation of a gigantic natural gas trust to control the supply of natural gas in the western peninsula. The Volcanic Oil & Gas Co. said to be backed up by Standard Oil capital, has now got its mains all but completed to Windsor, Sarnia, Blenheim, and scores of intermediate places, as well as Chatham and Wallaceburg, and it is said contemplate purchasing all the distributing stations at these places.

In Chatham, the Chatham Gas Co., has received a bid of $110 a share for their gas and electric light plant, but are holding out for $115. Chatham Gas stock sold a few years ago at $48.

If the Volcanic company could succeed in buying up the distributing stations, they would control the supply right up to the homes and factories of the consumers.

USE SOLDIERS FOR SENATORS

St. Petersburg, Oct. 8.—It is reported here from Helsingfors that the Governor-General of Finland contemplates forming a Senate from the Finns now in the Russian military service, to replace the Senators who last month notified him that they would not accept re-appointment to office because the Russian Cabinet insisted that the Finnish Senate assign $4,000,000 as Finland's contribution for the defence of the empire. The Finns were willing to contribute only $2,000,000 annually.

The constitution requires that the Finnish Senate be composed of Finnish subjects, but Finns of all parties, flatly refuse to accept office, under the present conditions.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

London, Oct. 8.—Guilty, with a recommendation to mercy, was the verdict of the jury in the case of Joseph Ward, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Alex. Warwick, last spring. Warwick fell or was shoved down the cellar at the Morkin House during a drunken brawl and fractured his skull.

WILL BE HERE' OCTOBER 28TH

It was expected that Mr. Walter Hughes, the cornet soloist of the 57th Regimental Band, would have been here from Vernon, B.C., the first of the month, but he was detained longer than he thought he would be. He writes that he will be here about October 28th, however. He is playing a week's engagement in Winnipeg.

The crew of the Arctic were paid off at Quebec.

BETROTHAL STORY IS CONTRADICTED

London, Oct. 8.—Direct contradiction is made by Truth yesterday to the persistent reports that King Manuel of Portugal is coming over here to be betrothed to Princess Alexandra of Fife.

"There is no foundation for the ridiculous report," says Truth, "that the betrothal is to be announced at a state banquet at Windsor Castle during His Majesty's visit. King Manuel and Princess Alexandra have never seen each other and there would be numerous other obstacles in the way of such a marriage, if it had ever been contemplated in any responsible quarter, which it has not been.

Prisoners and Guard Disappear.

Fort Saskatchewan, Alta., Oct. 8.—Between 5 and 6 p.m. three prisoners, undergoing sentence in the mounted police barracks here, escaped from a nearby field, where they were working.

Grave fears are held for the safety of a guard in charge, he having disappeared, and while he may have deserted with the convicts, there is a possibility that he may have met with foul play.

POPE PIUS IN NEED OF A REST

Rome, Oct. 8.—Dr. Petachl is convinced that the Pope's illness will continue intermittently unless a thorough cure is effected by complete rest, but his efforts to enforce his opinion have thus far been unavailing. Even in the present case, when the symptoms of gout were unmistakeable, the pontiff, in spite of the pain in one of his feet, insisted on leaving his bed and consented to suspend the giving of audiences only on condition that the bishops and prelates should be admitted to his bedroom.

Contrary to his doctor's orders he walks with the aid of a stick and drives in the gardens.

THE GUN-POINTER

The did-not-know-it-was-loaded fiend has again got in his deadly work. Hitherto it has been the disposition of a long-suffering public to write this pitiful creature down an ass. But tempora mutantur. It is evident that he refuses to take warning. He will continue to point the gun at the unhappy victim. It is time all this was changed. From 2 to 7 years at hard labor in gaol would stop a lot of this criminal sort of "fooling." It has become too prevalent and too destructive by half. It is easily avoided. Let the gun-pointer beware. Why should the victims be continued as sacrifices to criminal lunacy?

PETERBORO'S SHAME

In Tuesday's despatches appeared this item:—

Peterborough, Oct. 5.—The Peterborough Ministerial Association passed the following resolution yesterday:—

"That we put ourselves on record as being deeply distressed and humiliated by the fact that, during the past week, perjury has been openly and shamelessly committed in our city, and that consequently the good name of Peterborough has suffered greatly, not only in the province, but throughout the country.

"Further, we would deeply deplore the conditions which tempt weak men to such dishonorable and conscienceless action."

To what a low level politics will drag some men is shown by the West Peterborough election trial which was commented on by ministers in the extract quoted above. And what is the outcome? Mr. Stratton retains his seat because the judges refused to believe the oaths of men who confessed they were willing to swear anything—for a price. No one can blame the judges for refusing to accept the word of men confessedly liars, but at the same time their evidence—if there was a grain of truth in it—would have proven money being spent on the election in enormous amounts, and the rankest of perjury on the other side. As it is the political life of Canada is again dragged into the mire of public contempt, for the fact of the dismissal of the petition after such circumstantial details of corruption shows how rank was the perjury committed—somewhere.—Belleville Intelligencer.

THE PETERBORO' CASE

Ottawa Journal.

The West Peterborough election trial ended in an odd way, but upon the evidence it could not have ended otherwise than it did. One group of witnesses took the stand and swore that they had received money to vote for Mr. Stratton, who was elected. Another group followed and denied the charge. On the one hand was the charge of organized and general bribery. On the other was a flat denial. The judges eyed both groups over and decided that the men who had sworn that they had received money for their votes had sworn falsely. Their decision in this regard was, doubtless, based mainly in the conduct of the chief witness for the complainant, the "undesirable" who admitted that for his price he would swear to anything.

Neither of the political parties come well out of this trial. The Conservative complainant, doubtless, upon faulty information, put up a most disreputable witness and the fabric of the charge collapsed completely. There was, on the other hand, underlying all the evidence the plain indication that there was an organized bribery in West Peterborough and that men enjoying otherwise good reputations in Peterborough had been engaged in it. In plain terms, these party leaders in Peterborough—as the party leaders in London, for instance, had done before them—had looked upon the franchise as a thing to be bought and sold. There are in the evidence fleeting glimpses of a contest and subsequent protest conducted on lines basely subversive of the elemental principles of political morality.

The case has illustrated the fact that under the election law the seeker after a truth is impotent. The fact that the charges were all dropped when the group of charges fell through hints at the old plan of party saw-off. The party representatives seem to have agreed that the sleeping dogs should be let lie. There should be an amendment of the law. There should be a public prosecutor of election charges, independent of the party and subject only to the will of a stated majority in Parliament, a prosecutor whose function it should be to make election corruption dangerous to any political party which attempted it. Meanwhile the West Peterborough case should be examined by the House of Commons itself. But in the end the certain remedy would be found, if every decent Canadian were at pains to inform himself in politics, and employ his influence and his vote to keep things clean.

STILL THEY COME

After speaking of the fact that Mr. Stratton retains his seat by direction of the court, La Patrie says: "But it is not the less certain that West Peterborough has been the scene of reprehensible manoeuvres, corrupt acts, perjuries, etc. Several witnesses declared that they had received money for their votes. The distributors have sworn that they did not give a penny to anybody. The court when face to face with such manifest perjuries should have continued their investigations in order to reach the guilty. La Patrie has suggested before that a procurer-general should be appointed charged with the duty of watching every case where the public interest is at stake. This officer would be able to render signal services to society. He would strongly aid in freeing the country of individuals without consciences or scruples who believe themselves to be able at election times to carry on their sordid business with impunity."

EDITORIAL NOTES

The printed line dropped out of the headgear of one of our recently-quoted editorials on the election case, and left it without acknowledgement.

One journal suggests that the case of West Peterborough should be investigated by the House of Commons.

The newspapers of Canada with one accord demand action in the case of West Peterborough, which furnishes the most glaring of recent examples of the insufficiency of ordinary court procedure to follow up and punish those guilty of false swearing, etc. The Protest as a means of investigating corruption is manifestly inadequate, if not so total a failure as to be a temptation.

THERE WAS NO SAW-OFF IN WEST PETERBOROUGH. When the judges decided in one group it was idle to go on in the other way with the other groups, hence the complainant quit. He had to. But both sides pay their own costs. The battle was drawn, not compromised. There was no saw-off or anything of that character in the case of West Peterborough.

"Friday was 'Irish day' and the prelates and priests of the Council on the invitation of the Irish societies of Quebec gathered in St. Patrick's church at 7.30 p.m. to listen to a scholarly oration by Rt. Rev. S. G. Scollard, Bishop of Sault Ste. Marie. With a voice strong and vibrant, and with true Irish eloquence, he dwelt upon the part which the people of Ireland have played in the development of the Church here in Canada. He dwelt upon the providential distribution of the Irish people in Australia, Canada, the United States, and wherever the English language is spoken, of their pride in the faith for which their fathers had suffered, and of the ardent devotion of their Canadian children to the same faith. The Irish priests, he said, have never refused to respond to the call for duty amongst their countrymen, or, in fact, amongst any Catholic people.

"If there be a diocese," he said, "in which there are to-day no priests of Irish extraction, it is because they have not been asked, for the seminaries of Ireland have sent out their missionaries to every corner of the civilised globe."

FIFTY YEARS FORGOTTEN.

The Miraculous Mazes of the Official Mind.

Most Government departments still cultivate fine, healthy crops of red-tape, and that, added to the quaintness which seems natural to the official mind, works as wondrously as ever it did.

There is a parish in Lincolnshire called Horsington, which was possessed of an old, dilapidated, tiny cottage. The parishioners wished to pull the cottage down, and to sell the building materials, and they accordingly applied to the local guardians at Horncastle for permission. Those guardians gave their consent readily; but the sanction of the Local Government Board had first to be obtained before any pulling down could be done.

The Local Government Board, following the orthodox and stereotyped course, directed that a further parish meeting should be held to consent formally to the sale. This meeting was duly held, and a poll of the parish was demanded. And, after all, it was found that the estimated value of the materials of the old cottage was only $5 clear, while the cost of the poll would be $15!

But, of course, there is a proper routine for all these matters, and it must be adhered to rigidly.

Two magistrates—call them A. and B.—reported on the structural condition of a public-house. These two magistrates ordered certain work to be done; that is, one ordered the work, and the other approved, and agreed that the work was necessary. Now, A. was a joiner, and, as a joiner, carried out the work of reconstruction to the house; while B., who was a plumber as well as a magistrate, did the plumbing work under the orders of joiner-magistrate A. And, of course, the work which A. and B. did was the work which they, as magistrates, had previously ordered to be done, and which they—still as magistrates—would afterwards have to approve of when it was finished.

A familiar official farce is that of judges on circuit, wasting time and money, merely to receive a pair of white gloves when there are no cases to be tried at assizes; and during the revision of the jury lists at Northwich, some little time back, an overseer produced a blank sheet of paper, as there was not a solitary juror within his district. Nevertheless, official rules compelled him to make a journey of eight miles simply to produce a piece of white paper and swear to it.

In spending the national income, the official mind is at its best. The War Office—shot at by most red-tape stories—erected a building at Aldershot for a balloon-shed. The work of construction proceeded with true official rapidity—very slowly, in fact—and by the time it was finished other buildings in the neighborhood had been erected, with the result that it would have been impossible to get the balloon in and out of the shed. So the shed had to be taken down and rebuilt elsewhere.

That is merely one instance. One day recently a War Office official found, carefully pigeon-holed, an order for road-making material. The order was put in hand forthwith, and presently a traction-engine, with blocks of stone, gravel, and other material, was deposited at Aldershot, with a party of men.

But no one there had any instructions, or knew anything at all of any road-making proposals. Investigations were made, and slowly the red-tape was unwound, when it was discovered that the order was fifty years old—forgotten, and now raked up and gravely executed!

The Bushongo.

The return is expected shortly of an expedition, organized by Mr. E. Torday, which left England in Sept., 1907, for the Congo Free State, with the object of conducting a scientific inquiry into the customs and culture of certain native tribes south of lat. 2 S., between the Kwilu and Lomami rivers. Of the tribes visited, writes a London Times correspondent, by far the most important and interesting are the Bushongo, the western tribes of whom were discovered in 1884 by Wissmann's expedition. Little, however, has hitherto been recorded of them except their skill in handicrafts. The information now collected proves them to be one of the most remarkable tribes in Africa. In the first place they have preserved a great deal of their tribal history, and a list of no fewer than 123 great chiefs was obtained; numerous legends in connection with the reigns of certain of these rulers relate the migrations of the people, their wars with neighboring tribes, and the introduction or invention of various useful arts.

How New Zealand Became British.

How New Zealand became a British possession is one of the romances of colonization. Seventy years ago it was a sort of no man's land, but it leaked out that France contemplated annexation. There was a race from Sydney between a British and a French man-of-war, the former winning by a few hours and securing New Zealand for the British crown. A few years previously a French adventurer, Baron de Thierry, at the head of 100 followers, whom he had recruited in Sydney, had proclaimed himself "King of New Zealand," but the baron had not sufficient funds to maintain a monarchy. His subjects deserted, and his reign collapsed.

A Miserly Monarch.

One of the most inveterate hoarders on record was George IV. Not only was he adverse to destroying books and papers, but he preserved everything that could possibly be kept.

When he died all the suits of clothes he had worn for twenty years were discovered and sold by public auction. His executors also found secreted in various desks, drawers and cupboards numerous purses and pocketbooks crammed full of money, to the extent it is said of $100,000, together with more sentimental treasures in the form of locks of hair from the tresses of forgotten beauties of the court.

John Osterholm will be tried at Niagara Falls, Ont., on a charge of embezzlement from the A.O.U.W.

Something About Moose and Deer

It is now pretty well known among hunters that the best deer hunting country in Ontario is on the line of the Canadian Northern Ontario and that hunters receive special attention. Mr. C. Price Green, Passenger Agent of the line is a hunter himself who goes right with the parties and looks after them, in fact he located most of them. This year the line will be opened north of Sellwood into the midst of the Moose Country, they are reported very thick, the Engineers say that they have never seen anything like it, the Moose season up there opens October 15th, fifteen days before the Deer. We have something special on a new place that will take three parties of deer hunters.

The Kind You Have Always Bought.

THIS is the caution applied to the public announcement of Castoria that has been manufactured under the supervision of Chas. H. Fletcher for over 30 years—the genuine Castoria. We respectfully call the attention of fathers and mothers when purchasing Castoria to see that the wrapper bears his signature in black. When the wrapper is removed the same signature appears on both sides of the bottle in red. Parents who have used Castoria for their little ones in the past years need no warning against counterfeits and imitations, but our present duty is to call the attention of the younger generation to the great danger of introducing into their families spurious medicines.

It is to be regretted that there are people who are now engaged in the nefarious business of putting up and selling all sorts of substitutes, or what should more properly be termed conterfeits, for medicinal preparations not only for adults, but worse yet, for children's medicines. It therefore devolves on the mother to scrutinize closely what she gives her child. Adults can do that for themselves but the child has to rely on the mother's watchfulness.

Central Drug Co., of Detroit, Mich., says: "We consider your Castoria in a class distinct from patent medicines and commend it."

Christy Drug Stores, of Pittsburg, Pa., say: "We have sold your Castoria for so many years with such satisfactory results that we cannot refrain from saying a good word for it when we get a chance."

Jacob Bros., of Philadelphia, Pa., say: "We take pleasure in recommending Fletcher's Castoria as one of the oldest and best of the preparations of the kind upon the market."

Hess & McCann, of Kansas City, Mo., say: "Your Castoria always gives satisfaction. We have no substitute for it and only sell 'The Kind You Have Always Bought,' the original."

The Voegeli Bros., of Minneapolis, Minn., say: "We wish to say that we have at all times a large demand for Fletcher's Castoria at all of our three stores and that it gives universal satisfaction to our trade."

Polk Miller Drug Co., of Richmond, Va., says: "Your Castoria is one of the most satisfactory preparations we have ever handled. It seems to satisfy completely the public demand for such an article and is steadily creating a growing sale by its merit."

P. A. Capdau, of New Orleans, La., says: "We handle every good home remedy demanded by the public and while our shelves are thoroughly equipped with the best of drugs and proprietary articles, there are few if any which have the unceasing sale that your Castoria has."

M. C. Dow, of Cincinnati, Ohio, says: "When people in increasing numbers purchase a remedy and continue buying it for years; when it passes the fad or experimental stage and becomes a household necessity, then it can be said its worth has been firmly established. We can and do gladly offer this kind of commendation to Fletcher's Castoria."

CURE

Sick Headache and relieve all the troubles incident to a bilious state of the system, such as Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Distress after eating, Pain in the Side, &c. While their most remarkable success has been shown in curing

HEAD

Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in so many ways that they will not be willing to do without them. But after all sick head

Carter's Little Liver Pills are very small and very easy to take. One or two pills make a dose. They are strictly vegetable and do not gripe or purge, but by their gentle action please all who use them.

Our Canadian Hymn

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I find very little is known about the author of our great Canadian hymn, "What a Friend we Have in Jesus."

The author was Joseph Scriven, a native of Ireland and a graduate of Dublin University. He came to Canada and was engaged as tutor in the home of the late Capt. Pengelly, of H.M.R.N., in South Monaghan township. After that he spent his time and means in preaching the gospel, helping the poor, nursing them when sick, in fact, doing God's work as best he could. He was so humble. It appears he wrote two copies of the hymn, sent one to his mother in Ireland. It was from that one it got into print. Then the question arose, who wrote the hymn? It was attributed to some writers of hymns, but they all said no.

But the lady with whom he was boarding found the copy he kept in some papers, and asked him if he composed it. His reply was: "The Lord and me did it."

Mr. Scriven was never married and is buried in the Pengelly cemetery, by his official request, for there the young lady was buried that would have been his wife had she lived. There is nothing to mark his grave. I think those of us who have that hymn should have a little monument erected at his grave. I most respectfully request the Ministerial Association of Peterborough to take this matter into their consideration.

HUMOR OF THE "LORDS"

FUNNY SIDE OF GREAT BRITAIN'S UPPER HOUSE.

Lord Chancellor Is Unable to Call Any Peer to Order, and as a Result Is the Utmost Freedom Among the Debaters—Eccentric Noblemen Frequently Cause Trouble — Lord Denman and His Railway Carriage.

What will happen to the Finance Bill in the House of Lords is a matter upon which there is a good deal of speculation in Britain just now. I do not propose to offer any conjecture as to the probable fate of the measure, says a Parliamentary journalist in Tit-Bits. Indeed, nobody knows what will be done with it—not even Lord Lansdowne, the leader of the Unionist peers, as the noble lord himself confessed. But the consideration of the bill by the peers will not be hampered by the strict rules of procedure which are in operation in the House of Commons.

One of the most remarkable features of the House of Lords is its absolute freedom of speech and action. The Lord Chancellor, who sits on the Woolsack as Speaker of the House, is powerless to call any peer to order. There are no rules of debate. The closure is unknown. Every peer can practically do what he likes and say what he pleases.

Of course, disorderly conduct need never be feared from the aged and high-minded peers who regularly attend the sittings of the House. It would seem impossible for anything to disturb the well-bred decorum of their looks and demeanor. Certainly they are never tempted to do anything in breach of the unwritten customs of the Chamber. But in the absence of regulations as to order and debate, peers of eccentric habits occasionally cause a good deal of trouble, not unmixed, happily, with amusement.

I remember well the droll antics of the late Lord Denman, who died suddenly some years ago at the grand old age of ninety. To the very last he attended the sittings of the House of Lords, a bent and feeble figure, wearing a black skull-cap and white gloves, and leaning heavily on a stick. He had always a pet topic. For many years it was the dire necessity that existed for the provision by the railway companies of carriages labelled "Men Only." By bill and by motion, in season and out of season, he enlarged upon the dangers to men traveling alone by railway of being blackmailed by unscrupulous women. "Even in smoking carriages we are not safe from these false frail ones," he would exclaim. A common habit of his was to interpose in some debate on foreign complications, or some equally serious subject, to ask whether the Government had yet thought fit to compel the railway companies to provide compartments for men only; and having put the question, he would hobble out of the Chamber before an answer was given.

In later years he took up, curiously enough, the subject of the extension of the franchise to women. Session after session he brought in a Women's Suffrage Bill. His speeches in support of the measure were invariably rambling and rather incoherent discourses on all sorts of irrelevant subjects. Once when he was appealed to by the Leader of the House to keep to the point, he bridled up and exclaimed: "I may not be your equal in debate, but I am the match of any one of you in my shirt-sleeves."

Each of the noble lord's bills was brushed aside by the customary Parliamentary motion of rejection that it be read "this day six months." It happened one session, when Parliament continued its sittings for a longer period than usual, that the period of interdiction expired before the prorogation; and the noble lord, turning up on "this day six months," claimed the fulfillment of the motion that the bill should then be read. On another day in a different session that he had the bill down for second reading he did not hear the Clerk of the House call upon him to move the motion, owing to his deafness, and his surprise was comical to witness on ascertaining that, as all the business down for the day was transacted, the adjournment of the House had been moved. Then the sight of the dispersing peers turned his anger to fury, and, addressing the Lord Chancellor as that high functionary was ceremoniously retiring from the Chamber, he called out, "If you wait for a minute, I'll assist your progress with the toe of my boot!"

Another unconsciously humorous figure in the House of Lords, of a more recent date, was the late Lord Stanley of Alderley, who died a few years ago. Unlike Lord Denman, he had no special subject or grievance to ventilate. In fact, he took the whole world for his province. Great, indeed, was the variety of the topics upon which he spoke. But he was just as irrelevant as Lord Denman and more deaf.

He would place on the notice paper a question calling attention to the state of affairs in Uganda. For a time—but only for a very brief time—his speech was addressed to the particular matter of his question. Then suddenly he would be heard discussing the heavy burden of the rates, the difficulty of access to the Houses of Parliament, the advantage of the rotation of crops, and the danger to the nation of the fall in the birth-rate. It was not easy for the occupants of the Press Gallery to follow him, owing to his indistinct utterance.

However irrelevant he might be, there was no power in the House to stop him. He missed his train on a day that the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill was down for consideration; but as he had written out his speech on the woes of that lady he was determined that it should not be wasted.

Accordingly, at the next sitting, when the House was discussing the opening of museums on Sunday, he joined in the debate and related at great length his views on the sister of the deceased wife.

One-third of the Government park at Wainwright, Alta., has been burned over by prairie fires.

THE "LOST ORCHID."

It Was Rediscovered Only Through War and Bloodshed.

In 1902 only five of the precious cypripedium plants were left, not counting the home bred hybrid named for Mrs. L. F. Ames of Massachusetts. Four were in France, in the Jardin de Luxembourg; one was in England, in the conservatories of Sir Trevor Lawrence. These were fast declining, and the next year one alone in the known world gave forth a flower. Despairingly, Opoex, the Luxembourg gardener, tried to breed from it and waited in ardent and hopeful impatience. But you cannot make a high class, decent orchid germinate its own pollen. This orchid was no exception. It was bent on race suicide.

In such a plight were the orchidists when they offered $10,000 reward to any one who would find a hale and virile wild specimen of the Cypripedium fairrieneum.

England had long desired to open up Tibet to the range of commerce. Opportunity did not come till Russia was busy with war in Manchuria and Korea. Captain Younghusband was hurriedly dispatched by the English from India with a military force to penetrate to the sacred city of Lassa. The penetration was made—at cost of blood, life and treasure. Attached to the expedition was G. L. Searight of Darjeeling, surveyor in his majesty's service. Being, like many Englishmen, an amateur gardener, he botanized along the way, and one afternoon, 7,000 feet above sea level, he came upon the lost orchid.

He sent a thousand plants back to Calcutta by a native to be examined. News of this reached England. Indian botanists verified the specimens as the long vanished fairrieneum. That news also was cabled to Europe. "Events," commented the Orchid Review excitedly, "follow each other with such startling rapidity as to make one almost breathless!" These events—the arrival, the testing and the decision on the genuineness of the find—produced among the cognoscenti a tremendous sensation. Indeed, among orchidists the historic expedition, even the Russo-Japanese war itself, will be chiefly memorable for having led to the reclamation of this little "lady's slipper."

When 179 of Searight's plants arrived in London they brought $2,750—and $10,000 reward besides. At this rate Mr. Searight's discovery must have yielded him nearly $25,400—and not one of the plants yet in bloom.—Franklin Clark in Everybody's.

Debarred From Canada.

The Countess of Aberdeen is now in Canada in connection with the quinquennial gathering of the international council of women. "Lord Aberdeen, even if he had not been lord lieutenant of Ireland," says the Manchester Guardian, "would not have been free to accompany the countess to Canada, for the Dominion has a curious unwritten law. It is that no one who has held the position of governor general should ever return. This is because a returning governor general would have to take an inferior rank to that he had formerly held. There are four former governors general still living—the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Aberdeen and the Earl of Minto—and by this law they are forever debarred from revisiting Canada."

A Necessary Precaution.

Those invited to a certain college function held the other day included a number of distinguished foreign professors. It was remarked that the invitations gave explicit directions as to the proper garments to be worn. Somebody inquired why it was considered necessary to give such directions.

"Because," answered one of those in charge of arranging the function, "the last time we gave a similar entertainment there was so much doubt among some of the foreigners invited as to what should be worn that one German savant actually appeared in a dress suit and carpet slippers."—New York Times.

A Warship Target.

Warships, unlike war horses, stand small chance of being turned out to grass when their work is over. The old British battleship Edinburgh, which is on the sale list, is to be used as a target. If the vessel survives the gun fire it is probable that she will be subjected to an attack of torpedoes to discover what would be the effect of a well placed shot with a Whitehead on the bottom of a ship of the Dreadnought type, which a section of the Edinburgh's bottom can be made approximately to represent.

A New Gun Silencer.

Colonel Humbert, a retired officer of the French artillery, has invented a gun silencer like that of Hiram Maxim, as it employs the principle of muffling the sound by confining the gases of the explosion and allowing them to escape gradually. Colonel Humbert, however, uses simple horizontal cells, whereas the cells in Maxim's device are arranged on the principle of the gyroscope. Colonel Humbert's silencer is much heavier than Maxim's.

Locusts In Panama.

The method of exterminating locusts most generally adopted in Panama has been to dig a trench about fifty feet in length, two feet wide and one foot deep, with perpendicular sides, in which the locusts are driven by men beating the grass and trees with switches. In this way millions are collected and are destroyed with a solution of strong lye soapsuds. The trench is then refilled with earth so as to allay the odor.

72 Days of Dish Washing

You spend two hours every day washing dishes. That's 720 hours a year or 72 days of ten working hours each. This means that half the time is wasted. For with Taylor's Borax Soap you finish your work in one hour instead of two.

Isn't it worth five cents to have 36 days a year to yourself—to have cleaner and sweeter dishes than ever before with less than half the work?

Taylor's Soap

This wonderful soap is unlike any other you have ever known. It digs into the corners of dishes and loosens the dirt almost like magic. It cuts away grease and leaves the surface clean and polished.

Hard water makes hard dish washing, but Taylor's Borax Soap softens the hardest water and so makes the work easy. But it does more than soften the water—it softens the hands and leaves them even whiter than before.

With this soap you save all the bother of rubbing and most of the scouring. You simply have no idea of the work this soap can save—it is the greatest surprise you have ever known.

The glassware has a lustre that fairly sparkles with brilliance. The china ware looks as fresh and inviting as new. Yet you work only half as hard with this astonishing soap.

No soap could be purer than this, for during the boiling process we run thousands of gallons of clean water through the soap. Thus every impurity is carried away and the soap is absolutely clean.

Borax also sterilises and sweetens. It kills every germ and leaves no possibility of contagion. It destroys all odors and leaves a clean scent that is simply delightful.

CHEAP POWER AT OWEN SOUND

Owen Sound is considering a cheap power scheme and it is wholly likely it will soon have it. The power is generated at Eugenia Falls, at the headquarter of the Beaver River, a pretty stream which runs down the Beaver Valley into Georgian Bay near Meaford. The power is offered to Owen Sound at the power house, some 35 miles distant, for $20, or delivered in Owen Sound for $24. At present Owen Sound could use over 800 horse power, but the offer made to the town puts the minimum at 1,500 horse power. The offer looks tempting to Owen Sound.

This power project at Owen Sound is an example of the way in which live cities are grasping at every opportunity of securing cheap power. Brockville, we are proud to say, is showing a commendable spirit by endorsing vigorously the Long Sault power scheme, and we have but little doubt that before many years pass by the Long Sault power will be radiating electrical power, not only to Brockville, but to other progressive cities throughout Eastern Ontario.—Brockville Times.

BRIGHT PROSPECTS FOR A BANNER WINTER POULTRY SHOW

The Poultry Association held a well-attended and enthusiastic meeting last night with President George Paxman in the chair. Considerable general business of the association was transacted, the members displaying much interest in the proceedings. At the close a directors' meeting was held at which sub-committees were appointed and their work in connection with the coming poultry show which will be held on January 4th, 5th and 6th, was outlined. The association are having 250 extra new coops constructed and expect to have an entry list of 1,200 birds. Everything points to a successful show this winter and the members are determined that is shall surpass all others held in the past. An excellent line of prizes is being secured, which will include many of considerable value, and the association is being much encouraged by the hearty co-operation they are receiving in connection with the show.

A VERY ATTRACTIVE AND WELL DESIGNED THEATORIUM

To-morrow afternoon will see the opening of the third moving picture house in Peterborough—"the "Princess." The work on the new theatorium has been practically completed, and it is a particularly attractive and tastefully designed place of amusement. Proprietor Stanley Coon has overlooked no detail in the matter of construction and decoration, and has displayed most excellent judgment in both respects. The result is that the theatorium, both from the exterior and interior, is very pleasing to the eye. The building is a spacious one, 19 feet in width by 104 feet in depth, and occupies an entire space from George street to Chambers street.

The plan for the passage of the crowd in and out of the theatorium is one that will immediately appeal to all the patrons. The seats are so arranged that the audiences can be accommodated with the greatest degree of convenience and comfort, and there are only two aisles, one for the people coming in, and the other for those leaving. Those entering make their entrance by the right door and make their exit by the left. This reserves the aisles for these purposes and will entirely eliminate all uncomfortable crowding and confusion on occasions when the audience is particularly large.

The color scheme of the decorations of the interior is principally of green, red and brown, with the former shade predominating. The effect is a very harmonious one, and the appearance presented is appealing to the artistic sense, and there is not the least suggestion of flashiness or extreme taste. The ceiling is of white moire and blends nicely with the ornamentation of the walls and interior generally.

The front is a masterpiece of its kind and shows an excellent idea on the part of the architect, and is a distinct credit to the artist in charge of the decorative work. The general approach of the entrance, in accordance with the accepted plan, is the entire width of the building and is surmounted with a dome arch. It is finished all in white and set off to great advantage by the finer work and lines. The floor of the entrance is of white marble and the sides of Grecian tile. The lower part of the box office is of tile also with the name "Princess" artistically inlaid. The upper part of the office is of plate glass and is given a substantial appearance by bronze corner bars. There are two swinging doors to the theatorium, the entrance door being on the right and the divided exit door on the left. On the top of the outside arch the name "Princess" is prominently lettered in red, with two outstanding gold brackets on either side of it.

On the interior directly above the box office is the operator's room. It is constructed on the most approved lines and is tin and asbestos lined and absolutely fireproof. A "Type B. Edison" is the picture machine that will be employed. It is of the latest improved make that was given the unqualified approval of the New York Board of Fire Underwriters in their recent examination of moving picture machines. Mr. Coon has made arrangements for a superior service of non-inflammable films made by the leading producers of picture plays and in connection with this it might be mentioned that the management have contracted for being supplied with an unexcelled service of beautiful slides for the recognized popular song successes.

There are two hundred and fifty seats in the theatorium arranged with eight seats in each row. The space between the rows is liberal and will permit of the members of the audience passing in or out without any crowding or embarrassment. The floor slopes towards the stage in a gradual but sufficient incline and an excellent view of the curtain may be obtained from any seat in the house. The stage is twelve by fourteen feet and in on a good elevation in relation to seating space of the theatorium. At the rear of the stage two emergency exits have been made in case of fire or for any other reason that might arise necessitating the audience leaving as quickly as possible.

The "Princess" is in every way a handsome and modern theatorium and with the assurance of the very best programme that an experienced and discriminating management can provide should have a very large patronage of those interested in this form of entertainment which is very apparently meeting with the rapidly growing appreciation of the public.

Great credit for their excellent work is due contractor Will Hipperson and Mr. J. M. Watson, who had charge of the painting and decorating. The wiring and electrical fixtures have been done in a thoroughly satisfactory way by Messrs. Alexander & Miller.

WARBLER FOR GOLDEN WEDDING PRESENT

A golden warbler from South United States was in the Customs office over Sunday without an apparent owner. The valuable and rare little singer was consigned to Mr. George Matthews, and he did not know how it could have been sent to him, so he did not take it out until something definite about the bird was received. There was three dollars duty on the bird and another bill for ten dollars.

The warbler was left in the Customs office all day Sunday, Mr. Matthews being unable to find anything further about it. The Customs officials knew only that it was consigned to him. Enlightment followed, however, when Mr. T. F. Matthews, of Peterborough, reached town. His father told him about the bird and the reply was that he had sent down south for it, and that it had been consigned wrongly; it ought to have been sent to Peterborough first. It was intended as a present for Mr. Geo. Matthews on the occasion of his golden wedding yesterday. The bird is a very rare one, and a beautiful singer.—Lindsay Warder.

RAMA EXCURSION

The Orillia Packet says;—Recently the Rama and Georgina Island Indians chartered the Geneva for a special excursion to Chemong, near Peterborough, by way of the Trent Valley Canal. A quaint, but, very brief report of the outing it printed under the Rama Reserve heading. "They had some dance on the boat," we are told. "Perhaps they had some war dance, too!" "They saw good many lift-locks long the canal." "It is to be hoped they had no fire-water." The last statement looks suspicious.

HAS RETURNED FROM KINGSTON

Mr. R. Lees Attended the Meeting of Presberterian Commission

Mr. R. Lees returned home last night from Kingston after attending the meeting of the Presbyterian Commission appointed by the General Assembly to deal with the proposed separation of Queen's University from the church.

On the commission are forty-two members representing the church, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Only about twenty-seven were present including members from Cape Breton in the east to Portage la Prairie in the west.

As a result of the meeting the commission passed a resolution affirming the principle of separation from the church and acknowledged it as inevitable, but they did not want to complete the separation until a plan of future government and maintenance of the university was devised.

A committee was appointed to meet with a similar committee to be appointed by the trustees and the joint committee will prepare a plan which will be laid before the commission at another meeting to be held in the spring, and if that plan is acceptable the commission will report favorably to the General Assembly.

Among those present were: Mr. R. Lees, M.A., of Peterborough; Rev. J. J. Wright, Elk City, a former Peterborough boy; Rev. Mr. Wallace, Lindsay; Rev. Dr. C. W. Gordon (Ralph Connor) Winnipeg; Lieutenant-Governor Fraser, Nova Scotia, and Mr. Hamilton Cassells, of Toronto.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

THE REFERENDUM

There can hardly be any doubt as to the advisability and propriety of referring items of considerable expenditure to the people. The Isolation Hospital is one of these, although it is freely thought that it should have been an accomplished fact long ere this. That no money for permanent expenditures should be expended without reference to the people first is an old and well-approved municipal maxim. Nothing should be allowed to supersede or over-ride the vote of the people who have to pay the taxes, and the Isolation Hospital should not be made an exception.

THE AUDIENCE WAS DELIGHTED

Harold Jarvis and Mrs. Shafor Appeared at St. Andrew's Church—Programme of Much Merit

St. Andrew's church was crowded last evening when Mr. Harold Jarvis and Mrs. Shafor, of Detroit, appeared in a concert under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the church. The programme was a thoroughly enjoyable one, as was shown by the hearty applause that greeted each number. In every case an encore was demanded. Mr. Jarvis excelled himself, and he was never heard to better advantage in this city. There was a variety in his selections that was pleasing, and it would be difficult to say which was the most enjoyable. His first number was Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar," as arranged by Behrend. Then he gave two charming ballads, in which his voice appeared to good advantage. By request Mr. Jarvis substituted for one number "The Death of Nelson," and this fine descriptive solo was given with excellent effect. In his Scotch selections Mr. Jarvis is always good, and these, on account of their familiarity to the audience, were perhaps his most popular numbers. As one encore Mr. Jarvis gave that familiar and sweet old song, "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere" in a way that touched the hearts of many in the audience. The Victor Phonograph Company have had a record made of this solo of Mr. Jarvis'.

Mrs. Shafor, of Detroit, made her first appearance before a Peterborough audience last evening, and proved such a favorite that she will be sure of a hearty welcome should she visit the city again. Her rendition of her various numbers was excellent, and showed her versatility. Her heavier efforts were "The Balcony Scene and Potion Scene from Romeo and Juliet," and "If we had but a day" and in these she showed much talent. In lighter vein were "The Winston's Baby," in which she told of new ideas in child culture, "The Invalid," in which the lady is enjoying a spell of sickness, and in a Scotch number which told of the search of a mustard plaster by an old couple in a hotel in Inverness, Scotland. Perhaps her best number was "How Froggies go to Sleep" which was very realistically given. On the whole the concert was one of the best that the people of this city have listened to for some time, and it was thoroughly satisfactory.

The Ladies' Aid are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts, and a goodly sum was realized for the work of the society.

The accompaniments for the musical numbers were played in a sympathetic and pleasing manner by Miss Maud C. Bradley, of Brockville, under whose management the artists are making their tour.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

HAVELOCK AND BRUSSELS IN INTERMEDIATE FINALS

Special to the Review.

Havelock, Oct. 8.—To-day will pretty well decide whether Brussels or Havelock is to win the intermediate football championship of Ontario. At the town of Brussels at 3.30 o'clock to-day the first game of the finals will commence. With both teams well trained by a long season of playing and in the pink of condition and both teams out to win, it will certainly be a battle royal from start to finish.

The Havelock boys left on the afternoon train yesterday on their 225 mile trip to the scene where they will do battle. They spent last night in Toronto and left on the early morning train for Brussels. The following will be the line-up of the Havelock team:—

Goal, W. J. Rose.
Backs, H. T. Andrews, K. McKay,
Halves, W. McMullen, H. Kindred and W. Hitchins.
Left Wing, P. Lancaster, H. Mathison.
Right Wing, R. McPherson, G. Mathison.
Centre, Wm. Rose.

Mr. Hanna, of Toronto, will referee the game.

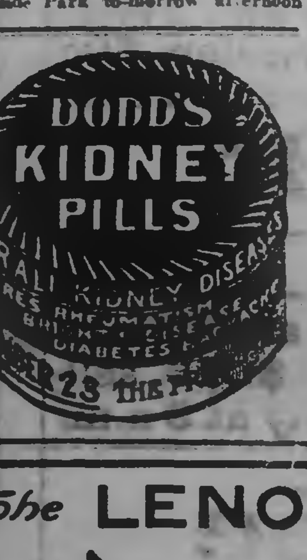
The result of the game will be bulletined in Mr. Ed. Fennell's window on Friday night.

"OLD BOYS" WILL PLAY THE STRATHCONAS TO-MORROW

A game that should prove one of unusual interest will be played at Riverside Park to-morrow afternoon when the boys of the old brigade, the former "Petes," will meet the Strathconas, city league nine.

The old boys' team will be chosen from the following:—Parnell, Graham D. McCabe, Steve Roddy, George Johnston, Yebbie Flaherty, Fred Davidson, Jerry Edmonds, Harry Burridge and Jack Sheridan. Dan McCabe and Yebbie Flaherty will hold down the mound and Edmonds and Burridge will do the receiving. Norm Dusty and Len Dobson will be the Straths' battery.

The game will start at three o'clock sharp and the general admission will be 15 cents.



The corner stone has been laid for a new Collegiate Institute at Port Arthur to cost $160,000.

Sir Fred Borden, Hon. Frank Oliver and Hon. R. Lemieux, are still absent from the capital.

It is rumored that London is to have a new theatre.

YOUNG CORBETT LOSES AGAIN

Boston, Mass., Oct. 6.—Dave Deshler, of Cambridge, won a hollow victory at the Armory A.A. last night, when in the fifth round he was declared the winner over Young Corbett, the latter's brother stepping into the ring to save him from being made a punching bag of any longer.

Young Corbett should not have been allowed to enter the ring, for he was in no condition. He was so fat that he was a middleweight, and that he lasted as long as he did was a surprise. Not once did he show a flash of his old ability. He was simply a mark for the well trained Cambridge boxer from the first tap of the gong.

ATHLETICS

PORT HOPE'S MEET.

Those who remember the fine exhibition given last fall by the Y.M.C.A. athletes in their indoor meet in the skating rink, will be glad to know that the final arrangements are now complete for a huge gathering of local and neighboring track athletes on Oct. 22nd, in the same arena, when some of Canada's best athletes will be present. "Jack" Tait and others will likely be present.

The events include 50 yards, 100 yards and 220 yard sprints, 1 mile run, 3 mile run, 3 mile invitation, 1-2 mile run and walks.

Mr. Galley, the Y.M.C.A. physical instructor, who got up last fall's meet, says, modestly, that this year's will be the best programme seen in Port Hope.—Port Hope Times.

BASEBALL

Detroit, Oct. 7.—Manager Hugh Jennings, of the Tigers, in an interview, had this to say regarding the chances of the Tigers against the Pirates in the coming championship struggle:

"Our pitchers have been going better every day, and when the series commences I believe they will be absolutely right. We shall probably depend wholly upon Mullen, Summers and Donovan for our pitching staff. Cobb will offset Wagner nicely, while Eddie Killian can be depended upon to oppose the left-handers if required."

Jennings lays great stress upon the value of the experience of the previous world's series to the Detroit players, all of whom have been through the mill except Shortstop Bush. Summarizing the situation the Tiger manager concludes thus:—"We are quietly confident—that is all. Our infield is away ahead of what we put against the Cubs two years ago, and the boys will profit by any mistakes they may have made in other years.

BETTING IN DETROIT.

Last night and as late as noon today the posted odds on the world's series stood at 2 to 1 on the Pirates. Then there was a rush of blood to the heads of the local sporting fraternity and all the money in sight at 2 to 1 was covered, and the crowd was looking for more, when the odds fell, first to 3 to 2 and then 6 to 5. This stopped most of the speculators. Fully $1,500 has already been wagered here, and the only thing that will change the odds will be a heavy influx of Pittsburg money.

Sir Thos. Shaughnessy denies that the C.P.R. has purchased the Allan line.

SPORTING NOTES

Ben Simpson, captain of the Hamilton Tigers, is beating all his former records in punting.

Jim Jeffries will sail from London for New York on Saturday.

The local Collegiate rugby team may play in Lindsay in the near future.

The following are the names of the players held in reserve by the Winnipeg and Edmonton Western Canada league teams. The names of both Jerry Edmonds and Harry Burridge appear;

Winnipeg—M. C. Holmes, J. L. Miller, W. H. Kruger, Jerry Edmonds, A. Anderson, J. W. Beatty, A. F. Sueiser, P. Clerban, F. E. Lohr, J. Grogan, Edmonton—Kelly, Burridge, Smith, Sterling, Barnstead, Gragion, O'Brien Brennan, Parker.

BASEBALL RETURNS AT ORIENTAL HOTEL

The Oriental Hotel has made arrangements to bulletin the results of the world's baseball series between Pittsburg and Detroit. The score will be given by innings for each game. To-morrow, in addition to the baseball returns the results of the big league Rugby matches and also the result of the lacrosse match at Montreal between Shamrocks and Montreal will be given. There is much interest in the world's baseball series among the local followers of the diamond.

MEETING OF CANADIAN CLUB ON THURSDAY

The Canadian Club will meet on Thursday, October 11th, at 8 o'clock in the City Council chamber. The principal business of the meeting will be the re-organizing of the club for the winter, and the election of officers. Other important matters will also be taken up.

SAVE THE SUMMER

It's up to Canada to lengthen her summers so as to keep the tourists here, keep the people out in the open, on the lakes, and by the sea, keep the children out of school for another fortnight. To save the summer two weeks longer there would have to be some readjustments. The Toronto Fair would have to be shifted to the last half of September. This is no hardship. Many farmers and tired harvesters are crying for just that change. How about the schools? Well there are many colleges and schools that do not open until the middle of September anyway. The longer a boy lives out in the open the stronger and better will he be for work through the winter. Then there is the tourist business of Canada. It is worth looking after. The rich people of the United States having discovered our beautiful summer, part from it with regret. With small coaxing they could be induced to stretch it out two weeks more. The little State of Maine is reported as collecting twelve million dollars annually from tourists and sportsmen. If Maine can do this, our vast wilderness should do ten times as much. Thirteen years ago, thirty hundred tourists passed in via Toronto to the Highlands every summer. To-day these pilgrims of pleasure number thirty thousand, and this is only one of Canada's great playgrounds. How many visitors are induced to cross over in winter, lured by the sparkle of Quebec and the bracing outdoor sports, we can only estimate. It is surely large. Suppose there are fifty thousand tourists traveling on our railways, living in our hotels, shopping in our shops on September 1. At the very lowest they would spend two dollars a day. A million and a half in two weeks. This is a golden stream, a Danae shower, that is worth cherishing. We take the stranger in and do well by him. If we can contrive to hold him a month longer, we can do him that much better. Therefore, save the summer.—Collier's, Sept. 18th, 1909.

A Small Blaze

The fire brigade was called upon this afternoon to put out a small blaze in the north end of the city.

October "Rod and Gun."

On the eve of the big game hunting season, the October number of Rod and Gun in Canada, published by W. J. Taylor, at Woodstock, Ont., gives foremost attention to big game hunting stories. They will be found varied enough in both localities and experiences to interest all sportsmen, and many will doubtless recall incidents in their own careers, corresponding with some related in such pleasing fashion in these pages. In the same way the article on "The Characteristics of a Fine Backwoods Guide," will remind numerous readers of character features shown by their own guides, and revive many pleasant memories—a rich storehouse of which is the property of every sportsman. Fish culture in Newfoundland will receive attention from every brother of the rod, and its inclusion shows that even at such a time the interests of the devotees of the fishing art are not neglected. Other seasonable pages are given, making the number one that should be the companion of every sportsman either at home or on his vacation, giving him many pleasant half hour in perusing what others have done and enabling him to fight some of his own battles o'er again.

LEAVING HERE TO GO TO OTTAWA

Mr. John Titterson Has Accepted Position With Lindsay Co.

Mr. John Titterson, of the home furnishings department of A. W. Cressman's department stores, and who is leaving Peterborough this week to fill his new position as manager of the home furnishing section of the T. Lindsay Co., of Ottawa, wished to thank his fellow-employees, the Cressman staff, and his many other friends for their good wishes for his future success in his new field, also to acknowledge the receipt of the much-appreciated remembrances.

Mr. Titterson is leaving many friends made in the seventeen years which he has spent in Peterborough—five years with R. Hall & Son, seven with J. C. Turnbull Co., and nearly five years with A. W. Cressman.

Manxland as Sanctuary.

The Isle of Man, which is now a happy resort of tourists, was long a sanctuary of British and foreign debtors, who fled thither in myriads. Of this degenerate period a whimsical versifier relates:

When Satan tried his arts in vain
The worship of our Lord to gain,
"The word," said he, "and all be Thine,
Except one spot, which must be mine.
That little place—'tis but a span,
By mortals called ye Isle of Man;
This is a place I cannot spare,
For all my choicest friends live
there."

With the passing of an act in 1814, which made it possible to prosecute a debtor on the island for debts contracted outside it, his Satanic Majesty is supposed to have withdrawn these aspersions.—From "The Isle of Man," by Agnes Herbert.

Verdi and the Critics.

No outsiders, not even members of the press, were allowed to be present at rehearsals of Verdi's operas. "A production of a work of mine," said Verdi, "is an affair between that work and the public. I do not write for the press, but for the public, who will support me if my work is good or who will execute me if it is not. I do not care for aught else." M. de Nevers thus describes Verdi's attitude at a dress rehearsal of "Otello" in Paris, when the press was present against his wishes:

"The critics were all placed in the corbeille of the amphitheater, some ten rows of stalls having been cleared away to make room for a table and chairs for Verdi, Boito and the directors. MM. Sardou, Meilhac, Halevy, Obin, the director of fine arts, and two or three dignitaries and officials of the opera sat behind in the remaining rows of stalls. Among the critics were MM. Reyer, Bruneau, Joncieres, Bellaigue, Pessard, Corneau and Sarcey. The foreign press was represented by M. de Blowitz and myself, and as Verdi came in all stood up, with hats off, and cheered the wonderful man. The orchestra joined, of course, in the ovation, and it was to the musicians that the master went, and, bowing his venerable head very low, he thanked them for the kind demonstration and shook hands with the nearest, but never once did he turn our way except for one moment, when he took us all in with a side glance—an ugly one—and then for the rest of the evening, some five hours, ignored our presence completely."

Whitey.

Instances are common enough where dogs and horses and even cats have been instrumental in saving human life, but this is the first instance in the writer's knowledge of such remarkable actions by a rat.

One of the two boys of a Danish family of four named Nelson living in southern Wisconsin was given a white rat, named Whitey, which became so contented that it never attempted to run away, notwithstanding that it was given the run of the house.

Before retiring one night the husband filled the bedroom stove with soft coal. At about 3 o'clock in the morning Mrs. Nelson was disturbed by something pulling and scratching at her hand and wrist and awoke to find the room filled with gas and Whitey squealing and jumping on the floor beside her. She was so nauseated and weak that she could do no more than roll off to the floor and crawl to the stairs. When attempting to descend she fell to the bottom, her head resting near the front door. The cold draft entering under the door finally roused her, and her screams for help brought the neighbors, who revived her husband.

Whitey died peacefully a year later, and a friend of the family diagnosed the case as one of gout.—Chicago Record-Herald.

THE YOUNGER SET

Author of
"The Fighting Chance."

Selwyn flushed a little, but went on cutting the pages of the magazine. When he had finished he flattened the pages between both covers and said, without raising his eyes:

"I'm sorry that crowd is to be in evidence."

"They always are and always will be," smiled his sister.

He looked up at her. "Do you mean that anybody else is a guest at Brookminster?"

"Yes, Phil."

"Alixe?"

"Yes."

He looked down at the book on his knees and began to furrow the pages absently.

"Phil," she said, "have you heard anything this summer—lately—about the Ruthvens?"

"No."

"Nothing at all?"

"Not a word."

"You knew they were at Newport as usual?"

"I took it for granted."

"And you have heard no rumors—no gossip concerning them—nothing about a yacht?"

"Where was I to hear it? What gossip? What yacht?"

His sister said very seriously, "Alixe has been very careless."

"Everybody is. What of it?"

"It is understood that she and Jack Ruthven have separated."

He looked up quickly. "Who told you that?"

"A woman wrote me from Newport. And Alixe is here and Jack Ruthven is in New York. Several people have—I have heard about it from several sources. I'm afraid it's true, Phil."

They looked into each other's troubled eyes, and he said: "If she has done this, it is the worse of two evils she has chosen. To live with him was bad enough, but this is the limit."

"I know it. She cannot afford to do such a thing again. Phil, what is the matter with her? She simply cannot be sane and do such a thing—can she?"

"I don't know," he said.

"Well, I do. She is not sane. She has made herself horribly conspicuous among conspicuous people. She has been [illegible] to the outer edge of effrontery. Even that set won't stand it always—especially as their men folk are quite crazy about her, and she leads a train of them about wherever she goes—the little fool!

"And now, if it's true that there's going to be a separation, what on earth will become of her? I ask you, Phil, for I don't know. But men know what becomes eventually of women who slap the world across the face with overringed fingers.

"If—if there's any talk about it—if there's newspaper talk—if there's a divorce, who will ask her to their houses? Who will condone this thing? Who will tolerate it or her? Men, and men only, the odious sort that fawn on her now and follow her about half sneeringly. They'll tolerate it, but their wives won't, and the kind of women who will receive and tolerate her are not included in my personal experience. What a fool she has been! Good heavens, what a fool!"

A trifle paler than usual, he said: "There is no real harm in her. I know there is not."

"You are very generous, Phil."

"No, I am trying to be truthful. And I say there is no harm in her. I have made up my mind on that score." He leaned nearer his sister and laid one hand upon hers where it lay across the hammock's edge.

"Nina, no woman could have done what she has done and continue to do what she does and be mentally sound. This, at last, is my conclusion."

"It has long been my conclusion," she said under her breath.

He stared at the floor out of gray eyes grown dull and hopeless.

"Phil," whispered his sister, "suppose—suppose—what happened to her father"—

"I know."

She said again: "It was slow at first, a brilliant eccentricity that gradually became something less pleasant. Oh, Phil, Phil!"

"It was softening of the brain," he said, "was it not?"

"Yes; he entertained a delusion of conspiracy against him, also a complacent conviction of the mental instability of others. Yet at intervals he remained clever and witty and charming."

"And then?"

"Phil—he became violent at times."

"Yes. And the end?" he asked quietly.

"A little child again, quite happy and content, playing with toys, very gentle, very pitiable." The hot tears filled her eyes. "Oh, Phil!" she sobbed and hid her face on his shoulder.

A little later Nina sat up in the hammock, daintily effacing the traces of tears. Selwyn was saying: "If this is so, that Ruthven man has got to stand by her. Where could she go if such trouble is to come upon her? To whom can she turn if not to him? He is responsible for her—doubly so if her condition is to be—that! By every law of manhood he is bound to stand by her now. By every law of decency and humanity he cannot desert her now. If she does these—these indiscreet things, and if he knows she is not altogether mentally responsible, he cannot fail to stand by her! How can he, in God's name?"

"Phil," she said, "you speak like a man, but she has no man to stand loyally by her in the direst need a human soul may know. He is only a thing—no man at all—only a loathsome accident of animated decadence."

He looked up quickly, amazed at her sudden bitterness, and she looked back at him almost fiercely.

"I may as well tell you what I've heard," she said. "I was not going to at first, but it will be all around town sooner or later. Rosamund told me. She learned—as she manages to learn everything a little before anybody else hears of it—that Jack Ruthven found out that Alixe was behaving very carelessly with some man—some silly, callow and probably harmless youth. But there was a disgraceful scene on Mr. Neergard's yacht, the Niobrara. I don't know who the people were, but Ruthven acted abominably. The Niobrara anchored in Widgeon bay yesterday, and Alixe is aboard, and her husband is in New York, and Rosamund says he means to divorce her in one way or another. Ugh, the horrible little man, with his rings and bangles!"

She shuddered. "Why, the mere bringing of such a suit means her social ruin, no matter what verdict is brought in. Her only salvation has been in remaining inconspicuous, and a sane girl would have realized it. But"—and she made a gesture of despair—"you see what she has done. And, Phil, you know what she has done to you, what a mad risk she took in going to your rooms that night."

"Who said she had ever been in my rooms?" he demanded, flushing darkly in his surprise.

"Did you suppose I didn't know it?" she asked quietly. "Oh, but I did, and it kept me awake nights worrying. Yet I knew it must have been all right—knowing you as I do. But do you suppose other people would hold you as innocent as I do? Even Eileen—the sweetest, whitest, most loyal little soul in the world—was troubled when Rosamund hinted at some scandal touching you and Alixe. She told me, but she did not tell me what Rosamund had said—the mischief maker!"

His face had become quite colorless. He raised an unsteady hand to his mouth, touching his mustache and his gray eyes narrowed menacingly.

"Rosamund—spoke of scandal to—Eileen?" he repeated. "Is that possible?"

"How long do you suppose a girl can live and not hear scandal of some sort?" said Nina. "It's bound to rain some time or other, but I prepared my little duck's back to shed some things."

"You say," insisted Selwyn, "that Rosamund spoke of me—in that way—to Eileen?"

"Yes. It only made the child angry, Phil, so don't worry."

"No; I won't worry. No, I—I won't. You are quite right, Nina. But the pity of it, that tight, hard shelled woman of the world to do such a thing to a young girl."

"Rosamund is Rosamund," said Nina, with a shrug. "The antidote to her species is obvious."

"Right, thank God!" said Selwyn between his teeth. "Mens sana in corpore sano! Bless her little heart! I'm glad you told me this, Nina."

He rose and laughed a little, a curious sort of laugh, and Nina watched him, perplexed.

"Where are you going, Phil?" she asked.

"I don't know. I—where is Eileen?"

"She's lying down—a headache, probably too much sun and salt water. Shall I send for her?"

"No; I'll go up and inquire how she is. Susanne is there, isn't she?"

And he entered the house and ascended the stairs.

The little Alsatian maid was seated in a corner of the upper hall, sewing, and she informed Selwyn that mademoiselle had "bad in ze head."

But at the sound of conversation in the corridor Eileen's gay voice came to them from her room asking who it was, and she evidently knew, for there was a hint of laughter in her tone.

"It is I. Are you better?" said Selwyn.

"Yes. D-did you wish to see me?"

"Yes."

The pretty greeting she always reserved for him, even if their separation had been for a few minutes only, she now offered, hand extended, a cool, fragrant hand which lay for a second in his, closed, and withdrew, leaving her eyes very friendly.

Eileen curled up among the cushions.

"Come out on the west veranda," she said. "I know what you wish to say to me. Besides, I have something to confide to you too. And I'm very impatient to do it."

He followed her to the veranda. She seated herself in the broad swing and moved so that her invitation to him was unmistakable. Then when he had taken the place beside her she turned toward him very frankly, and he looked up to encounter her beautiful direct gaze.

"What is disturbing our friendship?" she asked. "Do you know? I don't. I went to my room after luncheon and lay down on my bed and quietly deliberated. And do you know what conclusion I have reached?"

"What?" he asked.

"That there is nothing at all to disturb our friendship and that what I said to you on the beach was foolish. I don't know why I said it. I'm not the sort of girl who says such stupid things, though I was apparently for that one moment. And what I said about Gladys was childish. I am not jealous of her, Captain Selwyn. Don't think me silly or perverse or sentimental, will you?"

"I wish to ask you something."

"With pleasure," she said. "Go ahead." And she settled back, fearlessly expectant.

"Very well, then," he said, striving to speak coolly. "It is this: Will you marry me, Eileen?"

She turned perfectly white and stared at him, stunned. And he repeated his question, speaking slowly, but unsteadily.

"N-no," she said, "I cannot. Why—why, you know that, don't you?"

"Will you tell me why, Eileen?"

"I—I don't know why. I think—I suppose that it is because I do not love you—that way."

"Yes," he said, "that, of course, is the reason. I wonder—do you suppose that—in time—perhaps—you might care for me that way?"

"I don't know." She glanced up at him fearfully, fascinated, yet repelled. "I don't know," she repeated pitifully. "Is it—can't you help thinking of me in that way? Can't you be as you were?"

"No, I can no longer help it. I don't want to help it, Eileen."

"But—I wish you to," she said in a low voice. "It is that which is coming between us. Oh, don't you see it is? Don't you feel it—feel what it is doing to us? Don't you understand how it is driving me back into myself? Whom am I to go to except to you? What am I to do if your affection turns into this—this different attitude toward me? I—I loved you so dearly—so fearlessly."

Tears blinded her. She bent her head, and they fell on the soft, delicate stuff of her gown, flashing downward in the sunlight.

"Dear," he said gently, "nothing is altered between us. I love you in that way too."

"D-do you really?" she stammered, shrinking away from him.

"Truly. Nothing is altered. Nothing of the bond between us is weakened. On the contrary, it is strengthened. You cannot understand that now. But what you are to believe and always understand is that our friendship must endure."

"I want to ask you something," she said, "merely to prove that you are a little bit illogical. May I?"

He nodded, smiling.

"Could you and I care for each other more than we now do if we were married?"

"I think so," he said.

"Why?" she demanded, astonished. Evidently she had expected another answer.

He made no reply, and she lay back among the cushions considering what he had said, the flush of surprise still lingering in her cheeks.

"How can I marry you," she asked, "when I would—would not care to endure a—a caress from any man, even from you? It—such things—would spoil it all. I don't love you that way. Oh, don't look at me that way! Have I hurt you, dear Captain Selwyn? I did not mean to. Oh, what has become of our happiness? What has become of it?" And she turned, full length in the swing, and hid her face in the silken pillows.

He looked down at her, slowly realizing that it was a child he still was dealing with—a child with a child's innocence, repelled by the graver phase of love, unresponsive to the deeper emotions, bewildered by the glimpse of the mature role his attitude had compelled her to accept. That she already had reached that milestone and for a moment had turned involuntarily to look back and find her childhood already behind her frightened her.

Thinking perhaps of his own years and of what lay behind him, he sighed and looked out over the waste of moorland where the Atlantic was battering the sands of Surf point. Then his patient gaze shifted to the east, and he saw the surface of Sky pond, blue as the eyes of the girl who lay crouched in the cushioned corner of the swinging seat, small hands clutched over the handkerchief, a limp bit of stuff damp with her tears.

"There is one thing," he said, "that we mustn't do—cry about it, must we, Eileen?"

"No-o."

He was silent, and presently she said, "I—the reason of it—my crying—is b-b-because I don't wish you to be unhappy."

"But, dear, dear little girl, I am not."

"Really?"

"No, indeed. Why should I be? You do love me, don't you?"

"You know I do."

"But not in that way."

"N-no; not in that way. I-w-wish I did."

A thrill passed through him. After a moment he relaxed and leaned forward, his chin resting on his clinched hands. "Then let us go back to the old footing, Eileen."

"Can we?"

"Yes, we can, and we will—back to the old footing when nothing of deeper sentiment disturbed us. You know how it is. A man who is locked up in paradise is never satisfied until he can climb the wall and look over. Now I have climbed and looked, and now I climb back into the garden of your dear friendship, very glad to be there again with you—very, very thankful, dear. Will you welcome me back?"

She lay quite still a minute, then sat up straight, stretching out both hands to him, her beautiful, fearless eyes brilliant as rain washed stars.

"Don't go away," she said. "Don't ever go away from our garden again."

"No, Eileen."

"Is it a promise—Philip?"

Her voice fell exquisitely low.

"Yes, a promise. Do you take me back, Eileen?"

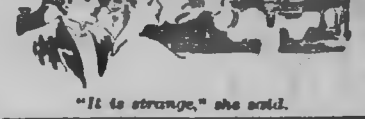
"Yes, I take you. Take me back, too, Philip." Her hands tightened in his; she looked up at him, faltered, waited, then in a fainter voice: "And—and be of good courage. I—I am not very old yet."

Much later, when Nina discovered them together, Eileen, curled up among the cushions in the swinging seat, was reading aloud "Evidences of Aztec Influence on the Symbolism of Ancient Yucatan," and Selwyn, astride a chair, chin on his folded arms, was listening with evident rapture.

Chapter 21

HITHERWOOD HOUSE, opened from end to end to the soft sea wind, was crowded with the gayest, noisiest throng that had gathered there in a twelvemonth. The Orchils and the Lawns were there, the Minsters, the Craigs from Wyossett, the Grays of Shadow Lake, the Draymores, Fanes, Mottlys, Cardwells—in fact, it seemed as though all Long Island had been drained from Cedarhurst to Islip and from Oyster Bay to Wyossett to pour a stream of garrulous and animated youth and beauty into the halls and over the verandas and terraces and lawns of Hitherwood House.

It was to be a lantern frolic and a lantern dance and supper, all most formally and impressively informal. And it began with a candle race for a big silver gilt cup and a motor boat race won by Boots and Gerald. Out in the bay lay Neergard's yacht, outlined in electricity from stem to stern, every spar and funnel and contour of hull and superstructure twinkling in jeweled brilliancy.



"It is strange," she said.

On a great improvised open pavilion set up in the Hither woods, garlanded and hung thick with multicolored paper lanterns, dancing had already begun, but Selwyn and Eileen lingered on the lawn for awhile, fascinated by the beauty of the fireworks pouring skyward from the Niobrara.

"They seem to be very gay aboard her," murmured the girl. "Once you said that you did not like Mr. Neergard. Do you remember saying it?"

He replied simply. "I don't like him, and I remember saying so."

"It is strange," she said, "that Gerald does."

Selwyn looked at the illuminated yacht. "I wonder whether any of Neergard's crowd is expected ashore here. Do you happen to know?"

She did not know. A moment later, to his annoyance, Edgerton Lawn came up and asked her to dance, and she went, with a smile and a whispered "Wait for me, if you don't mind; I'll come back to you."

At intervals he caught glimpses of Eileen through the gay crush around him. He danced with Nina and suggested to her it was time to leave, but that young matron had tasted just enough to want more, and Eileen, too, was evidently having a most delightful time. So he settled into the harness of pleasure and was good to the pink and white ones, and they told each other what a "dear" he was and adored him more inconveniently than ever.

Truly enough, as he had often said, these younger ones were the charmingly wholesome and refreshing antidote to the occasional misbehavior of the mature. They were, as he also asserted, the hope and promise of the social fabric of a nation, this younger set.

THE ISOLATION HOSPITAL STILL DECORATING THE SHELF

Council Comes to Conclusion $15,000 Will Not be Enough to Buid land Equip it — Will be Taken up Again on Monday Night.

If William Shakespeare had been around at the meeting of the City Council last night he no doubt would have got off something like this, regarding the Isolation Hospital:

"To build or not to build that is the question. Whether 'tis better to go ahead at once, and perhaps run short of money. Or wait till January and ask the people for a larger sum.'

But Shakespeare was not there, and as for the hospital it looks as if it were a good piece away yet. If it had been present at the meeting of the Council last night no doubt it would have blushed like a Stony Lake sunset on account of all the attention it came in for.

To begin where the Council stopped, it may be stated that the contract for the hospital has not yet been let, and the "nothing doing" sign will be hung out till the Council meets again on Monday night.

For the number of motions passed bearing on the same question and contradictory to each other, the meeting last night probably establishes a record. The views of the aldermen changed about as rapidly as those of a dissolving moving picture machine. Some of them appeared willing to do anything and everything provided there were a sufficient number of the same opinion.

The Council met in the committee room with Mayor Rush in the chair. Aldermen Morgan, Gillespie and Turner were the absentees. The latter has been granted a month's leave of absence. After the meeting had been going for about an hour someone asked if it was a committee of the whole Council or a Council meeting. It was decided that it was Committee of the Whole.

At the start Ald. Bradburn, chairman of the Property Committee explained that $15 000 was not going to be enough to complete the hospital according to the specifications prepared, and upon which the contractors had figured. The building alone, Ald. Bradburn said would cost $11,000. The estimate for heating and plumbing was $2,700, for wiring and lighting $250. The architect's fees would total $650 and then there would be extras. There always were extras in a large building. This left no money for equipment. The Council cannot issue debentures for more than $15 000 for the hospital without getting the consent of the people, and anything above $15 000 spent in connection with the building and equipping of the institution would have to come out of current revenue, which would mean a higher tax rate. Before proceeding with the work Ald. Bradburn thought the Council should look at the question very closely.

Mayor Rush said that contagious disease had cost the city nearly $4,000 this year, and personally he would like to see the hospital build at once.

Ald. Hicks said the trouble would be that a number of the aldermen would not stand for a higher tax rate. He was in favor of the original decision of the Property Committee, namely, to leave the matter to the people to be voted on in January.

Ald. Buller wanted to know why sand and lime brick was specified for part of the work, but it was decided to stick to the main point, and to deal with Ald. Buller's question later.

Dr. MacPherson, M.H.O., did not know exactly what it would take to equip the hospital. It would be over a thousand dollars he thought.

Ald. Metheral suggested that tenders for plumbing, heating and wiring be secured before going any further.

Ald. McIntyre said that the building would be built a thousand dollars cheaper this fall than next spring. Ald. Duncan agreed with him.

Mr. Blackwell, architect, who was present, admitted that there would likely be extras.

"Better leave it till spring," said Ald. Buller.

"That's what I say," said Ald. Bradburn.

Ald. Morrow moved, seconded by Ald. Duncan, that the contract be let to Mr. Rose for $11,000, and that provision be made for raising $15,000 by debentures.

Ald. Hicks moved in amendment seconded by Ald. Bradburn, that tenders for the other work be secured before awarding the contracts.

The main motion carried, all voting for it except Ald. Hicks and Ald. Bradburn.

It having been decided to go ahead with the work, Mr. W. H. Moore, chairman of the City Trust Commission, was called, and questioned regarding the site on the Hilliard farm. He asked how much land would be required.

It was agreed that two acres would be about right.

Mr. Moore said the city could have as much land as was wanted.

A motion was passed to leave the amount of land to be taken as a site in the hands of the chairman of the Property Committee, and that the hospital be built on the high part of the farm off Hilliard street.

Then the discussion turned to the cost of having the sewer and the waterworks extended to the hospital and it developed that this would add another $1 500 or $2,000 to the cost.

"Where is this going to come from?" Ald. Bradburn asked.

Ald. Morrow thought the cost of the hospital could be cut down. He wanted to see the hospital started at once.

Ald. Bradburn, seconded by Ald. Buller, moved that the ratepayers be asked to pass a by-law for $20,000 for the Isolation Hospital at the elections in January. This resolution carried, Aldermen Bradburn, Duffus, Hicks Buller and Metheral voting for it.

There was more discussion and Ald. Hicks suggested that a regular Council meeting be held and the suggestion was acted upon.

In the Council meeting Ald. Bradburn moved that the Property Committee secure full particulars as to cost and then submit a by-law to the people in January for the amount required. Ald. Hicks seconded the motion.

Ald. Morrow argued in favor of going ahead with the hospital at once. He estimated that the hospital could be completed for $15,400. He moved in amendment, seconded by Ald. Duncan, that the contract with Jas. Rose be entered into. The amendment was lost.

Ald. Duffus moved that the Council adjourn till Monday night and that in the meantime the Property Committee get figures of the hospital complete in every respect. Ald. Morrow seconded this and it carried on a vote of 5—4.

EMPTY BARN WAS DESTROYED

Fire Had Gained Considerable Headway Before Firemen Arrived

A barn near the corner of Concession street and Euclid avenue, Ashburnham, the property of Mr. Denis O'Brien, of Indian River Station, was almost totally destroyed by fire last night. An alarm was sent in to the fire station at 1.05, but the flames had made such headway on their arrival that little could be done. A large number of citizens were attracted to the spot by the illumination, which could be seen a long distance away. The barn was not occupied.

HAVELOCK LIVERY IS WIPED OUT BY FIRE

Special to the Review.

Havelock, Oct. 7.—Fire broke out on Monday night at 11 o'clock in the livery stable of Mr. Mike Lonergan, on Quebec street, and in a short time completely destroyed the whole building, causing a loss of about $600 on building and about $750 loss to Mr. Lonergan on contents of barn.

The fire, the cause of which is unknown, broke out in the centre of the building and in a very short time was a mass of flames. The horses and a number of vehicles were got out but some of the heavier rigs and all the cutters and blankets which were stored upstairs were burnt. The buildings nearby were in great danger when the fire was at its worst, but as there was no wind and the celebrated Havelock bucket brigade on hand the fire was confined to the one building.

Mr. Lonergan has $600 on contents of barn, while Mr. John Richards, the owner of the building, has an insurance of $500.

Twenty Corking Members

Twenty corking musical numbers in a single show is the unapproached record held by George M. Cohan's "The Honeymooners," which comes to the "Grand" next Wednesday, Oct. 13th, direct from an all summer run at the magnificent New Amsterdam Theatre, New York, where it broke all records for the season. Cohan wrote "The Honeymooners" for himself, and he outdid all his preceding efforts. He wanted a vehicle that would be certain to remain on Broadway all summer, and he spared no effort to make the song show a wonderful production. He gave it a stirring plot of love and politics and mistaken identity in a Vermont village; he gave it a score of musical numbers; he gave it a snappy, brilliant dialogue and he staged it with almost reckless disregard of expense. The result spelled immediate and lasting success. The original production comes here and it is no exaggeration to say that in "The Honeymooners" Cohan has compressed sufficient material for most authors to have written three comedies from. Cohan, however, is an intellectual millionaire, and he has lavished the riches of his genius on "The Honeymooners." Yes, its a rural song show with city tunes, and many of them the humming kind.

TEN YEARS LATE

The experience of one member of a cow-testing association is worth recording as showing the necessity of testing as well as weighing milk. His principal income is from selling cream, so that his astonishment may be guessed when he finds this year that the milk from a twelve-year-old cow, that he raised on his farm and fondly imagined one of his best cows has never tested more than 2.9 per cent. of fat. The discovery comes somewhat late to a man who has been harbouring a cow that for a productive period of ten long years has been masquerading as an animal producing fairly rich milk. The cow never gives this information concerning herself voluntarily; it has to be sought for and ascertained by definite and regular sampling. All real improvement of dairy herds includes systematic weighing and sampling of the milk from each cow in the herd. All the herd tests simply average results, that a man likes to have made will never detect the poorest cow or give due credit to the best cow. There must be testing of individual samples.

HARLAND AND WOLFF WILL LIKELY BUILD NEW FLEET

Halifax and Prince Rupert are Named as Probable Locations for the Branches of the World's Greatest Individual Shipbuilding Company.

Ottawa, Oct 9.—Harland & Wolff of Belfast, Ireland, the greatest individual shipbuilding firm in the world, have decided to establish in Canada.

Their arrangements are not perfected, but plans are so far forward that in a week or two, or possibly in a few days, a definite statement will be made.

Harland & Wolff are the premier warship builders, not only of the British, but of other empires, and although no contracts have been made and nothing further than correspondence and verbal communications have passed between the Canadian authorities and the great Irish firm, it is understood that Harland & Wolff will build in Canada the first warships for the new Canadian navy.

It is probable that the first dockyards will be constructed and the plants laid down at Halifax.

Not only in the Maritime Provinces, but also on the Pacific Coast, will Canadian war vessels be built. The belief has prevailed that Vancouver will be the favored city, but in view of a [illegible] in London by the Canadian representatives to the imperial naval defence conference, it is believed that the building of the Pacific section of the fleet will take place at Prince Rupert.

This has caused some heart-burning in British Columbia, and possibly the Government view may be altered, but the present idea of the Government is that Canada will borrow two obsolete second-class cruisers as a beginning. These will be of the Bristol type. Of course they are not obsolete in the common acceptance of the term; it is merely that in the British navy they have been superseded as a standard type by vessels of a later class. The proposal is to place one on the Pacific Coast to serve in the dual capacity of training ships and fisheries protective cruisers.

This much only is really definite, that Canada will build a navy, and that it will cost a good many million dollars.

Capt. Newton, who has been A.D.C. at Government House for some years, has been appointed Canadian representative for Harland & Wolff.

ASQUITH CABINET WILL NOT CHANGE THE BUDGET

Although Premier of Great Britain is Holding Another Consultation With the King, Churchill Declares That Commons Will Make no Concessions.

London, Oct. 9.—At least some members of the Cabinet are opposing any compromise, such as has been suggested by King Edward, to prevent a constitutional crises over the budget.

Winston Spencer Churchill, President of the Board of Trade, speaking last night at the National Liberal Club, declared that the Government would make no overtures to the House of Lords, and accept no compromise, and that no amendment to the finance bill by the Upper House would be entertained. The House of Lords, Mr. Churchill added, had no right to interfere in any way with the financial business of the Government, directly or indirectly, and that the Liberals having a united party, and a resolute Prime Minister, were ready for the [illegible] were forced upon them.

Lord Loreburn, Lord High Chancellor, who followed Mr. Churchill, said he refused to believe that the House of Lords would take a step which would lead to a most grave conflict, and at the same time place the finances of the country in a state of disorder, so far-reaching, so serious, that few persons who had not studied the subject really appreciated the extent of the evil.

Mr. Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, in a speech at Bristol, declared that the Irish land bill was as important as the budget, but he believed the House of Lords would pass the budget.

Premier Asquith left Balmoral Castle last night for London for a lenthy consultation with King Edward.

IS LORD NORTHCLIFFE STUNG WITH NEWFOUNDLAND MILLS?

New York, Oct. 9.—Men expert in the manufacture of news print paper threw further illuminating information yesterday upon the experiment into which Lord Northcliffe, a leading publisher of British periodicals, has entered in establishing his $6,000,000 wood pulp and paper-making plant in the wilds of Newfoundland. It was further asserted by paper producers who were in Washington when the problem as to the tariff on pulp and paper was threshed out that the English publisher, through influences inspired by himself or his associates, was among those who endeavored to force the nation's lawmakers to knock off all duty on those commodities.

"According to an official of a large pulp and paper corporation, who knows the place well, Northcliffe's new company "is indulging in a dream from which it must be aroused at a comparatively early period with a rude awakening."

"Our company," said this official, "had the opportunity years ago of establishing a paper plant in that very wilderness, but after careful study of all phases of the proposition we dropped it in a hurry. We ascertained with absolute exactness that the locating of a mill in that territory would within a few years result in a sweeping financial loss."

THEOLOGICAL CONTROVERSY IN NEW YORK PRESBYTERY

New York, Oct. 9.—One of the sharpest theological controversies since the trial of Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs of Union Seminary, on charges of heresy, threatens to develop from the action of the New York Presbytery last Monday in granting permission for the ordination of the Rev. Archibald Black, one of three candidates for the pulpit, who upon examination refused to subscribe to certain orthodox views expressed on cardinal Scriptural doctrines, such as the story of the Garden of Eden, the Immaculate Conception and the miracles.

"The direct consequence probably will be the placing on trial of the New York Presbytery before the Synod of New York, which will hold its annual meeting in Johnstown, N.Y., on Oct. 19, 20 and 21, and the outcome of this proceeding may be a decision prohibiting the presbytery from licensing any more graduates of Union Theological Seminary, from which Mr. Black and George A. Fitch and John E. Steen, the other candidates accused of heterodoxy, came up for examination.

DEATH WAS ACCIDENTAL

Orangeville, Oct. 9.—The jury investigating the death of Joseph Paul of Toronto, killed while uncoupling a freight train, returned a verdict of accidental death, but reported that the handles by which the angle-cocks on the airbrakes were operated were too short for safety. The jurors suggested the railways equip each car with a lever, which would enable a brakeman to operate the angle-cocks.

"It is stated by the railway officials that the said appliances are standard and approved by the Railway Commission, so that the company is not liable for negligence in using them. While the said order of the commission is not before us, we think that the efficiency of such appliances can best be studied by a petit jury in the light of an accident which brings out the defects, and that the jurisdiction of the petit jury has been outraged by its transfer to the Railway Commission."

FUNDS FOR THE SUFFRAGETTES

London, Oct. 9.—Under the auspices of the Women's Social Political Union a large and very enthusiastic meeting was held in Albert Hall Thursday night. Its purpose was to give a farewell to Mrs. Pankhurst, who is leaving for the United States on a lecture tour in behalf of women's suffrage.

Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, who presided, invited a donating of funds. She said that 50,000 pounds ($250,000) were needed, and that 48,584 pounds had been already subscribed. Within ten minutes an additional 3,000 pounds had been raised.

Suffocated as She Slept.

South Norwalk, Conn., Oct. 9.—While in bed at her home Mrs. Joseph O'Brien yesterday met a tragic death from suffocation, caused by the fumes from a bottle, containing smelling salts. Mrs. O'Brien had been complaining of headache and in the afternoon she went to sleep with a bottle of smelling salts at her nose. The ammonia from the bottle was spilled and ran over her face and nose, the fumes producing death while she slept.

These pictures of some of the wonderful sights of polar regions were taken by the national Antarctic expedition under Captain Scott. The expedition saw some very fine auroral displays. The color of the auroral curtain reproduced above was a pale straw yellow, and the movement which accompanied the display was very striking. "Unhappily it is an impossible thing even to suggest in picture, for as the curtain appears to fold in one direction it is waved out of sight, in another, while the varying intensity of the various beams of light which compose it—now brilliant, now vanishing altogether, now stealthily appearing or disappearing imperceptibly—gives the onlooker a strange feeling of expectation and bewilderment, to which is added the conviction that the whole is very beautiful, but quite impossible to represent on paper."

FINDING OUT WHY PORT ARTHUR FELL

St. Petersburg, Oct. 9.—The Government yesterday announced the personnel of a court of ten members, five military and five civil officials, who will try the engineers who superintended the fortification of Port Arthur. The decision to try the engineers is the result of an official investigation just completed. The investigators discovered that the fortress was not one-tenth as strong as the St. Petersburg authorities had been led to believe it was.

The engineers, the investigation indicated, received enormous sums of money, which they pocketed, either doing nothing at all to strengthen the fortification, or throwing up defences which generally had little more than scenic value.

MAY MOBILIZE ENTIRE FORCE

Ottawa, Oct. 9.—It is stated here yesterday that when Gen. Sir John French comes to Canada next year, there will be a mobilization of all the Canadian troops at Petewawa military camp, and a grand review.

The exact date of the arrival of Gen. French has not been decided, but it is expected that he will be in Canada early next summer. His special mission will be to inspect the Canadian land forces, and to take an inventory of equipment and capacity for mobilization. The military establishment of Canada is 57,000 men.

On inquiry at the Militia Department yesterday it was stated that there had been no official communication regarding the matter.

A team of cadets from Great Britain will visit Canada next year at the time of the D.R.A. matches.

THE WEST WANTS SCHOOL CONTROL

Winnipeg, Oct. 9.—"The Governments of the three western provinces have decided to make a united appeal to the Ottawa authorities for the right to administer their own school land and school land funds."

This announcement was made by Hon. George R. Caldwell, Minister of Education for Manitoba, who returned Thursday night from Regina, where he was in conference with Premier Rutherford of Alberta and Hon. J. A. Calder, Minister of Education for Saskatchewan, on the subject.

ROBBED CHURCH SYSTEMATICALLY

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 9.—In the arrest of John Short, the police believe that they have a criminal unique, for he has systematically robbed Christ Church, one of the largest edifices in this city, during the past ten months.

Short was befriended by the rector, Rev. C. C. Owen, who gave the young man work at electrical repairing in the church. Short stole valuable lamps and other small pieces of furniture, and yesterday a search of his room disclosed an electric motor which used to operate the church pipe organ.

SUFFRAGETTES WERE AFTER LLOYD-GEORGE

Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng., Oct. 9.—Last night found this city, where David Lloyd-George, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, will deliver two important budget speeches this afternoon and to-night, invaded by the suffragettes. The Chancellor was escorted from the station by a strong force of police.

The suffragettes attempted last evening to hold a meeting in the drill hall, but students and the noisy element of the city raised such a din that the speakers could not be heard, and they finally broke up the meeting by throwing fireworks on the stage. The suffragettes then proceeded to the Liberal Club, through the windows of which they threw stones. Four of them were arrested.

NO PENNY BANK AT BRANTFORD

Brantford, Oct. 9.—After [illegible] years of experiment the Brantford public school board will do away with the school saving system, on the ground that too much teaching time is taken up, and that the pupils fail to show interest in the system. The trustees also claim that friction results between the teachers and the parents.

No Change in Style.

Ottawa, Ont., Oct. 9.—It is officially stated that a report which says that the Postoffice Department intends to substitute D. C. (Dominion of Canada) for E.R. is a myth, heard for the first time last night by the Department.

MURDER VERDICT AGAINST MRS. TURNER AT TORONTO

Jury Inquiring Into Death of Authers' Baby at Niagara Falls Brings in Verdict of Wilful Murder Against Mrs. Mabel Turner.

Toronto, Oct. 9.—Mrs. Mabel Turner, alias Gmelin, was found guilty of murder of the Authers' infant by the chief coroner's jury at the morgue last night.

The verdict was as follows:

That the Authers' infant came to her death in the City of Toronto, in the County of York, between the dates of Saturday, Sept. 11, and Thursday, Sept. 16, by strangulation at the hands of Mrs. Mabel Turner.

And that the aforesaid Mabel Turner did so kill and slay the aforesaid infant Authers.

And the jury further would suggest that the authorities establish a home where foundling infants may be cared for.

This is the second time that this crime has been laid at her door in a coroner's court. Mrs. Turner had been taken back to the jail before the jury returned with their verdict, after less than half an hour after the taking of evidence was closed.

Chief Coroner Johnson outlined the evidence briefly, but graphically. He said: "There is seldom a case where the police have succeeded in forging so complete a chain of evidence. There seems to be no missing link.

"Mrs. Turner is shown to have bargained for the adoption of the child. She is shown to have got it at the hospital on the day of its birth. Cries like to those of an infant being strangled were heard in her room by not one, but two people. They were described as the cries of a strangling infant, even before there was the least shadow of suspicion against this woman.

"She was seen leaving the house with a parcel like that in which the child was found. She is traced to the place where the parcel containing a bundle was found. She told strange and varying stories of her reasons for going there. The very box in which it was found is shown to be a box which was in her possession.

"You jurors may have thought it impossible to believe that any woman could commit such a crime against a harmless infant for money, but let me tell you gentlemen such things have been done.

"It is a very large case. We know that this sort of thing has been made a trade in some countries and I have for years pointed out not only to the police, but to other authorities interested in the matter that many infants were found strangled and that no one could find out who had placed them where they were found.

"We may have one of these people. There may be others that are making their living out of just this thing."

Mrs. Turner was in court during the greater part of the hearing. All the life has gone out of her face and the whimsical smile which has made her face so attractive, was not seen for black and her eyes were sombre and brooding.

Mrs. Annie Authers, the mother of the murdered child, was also in court and was frequently moved to tears. She was attended by her friend, who strove to shield her from prying eyes, but she seemed to be fascinated and did not leave the room until after the coroner had closed his address.

The important evidence of the sitting was given by Mrs. Goldie, with whom under the name of Mrs. Miller, the prisoner had lived at the Wood street house. Mrs. Goldie was very nervous, but when she began to speak she gave her evidence clearly and convincingly, hesitating only when she strove with almost painful honesty to speak only of those things of which she had an exact and personal recollection.

Evidence was also given by the clerk in the Eaton store who had sold a pair of shoes to Mrs. Turner a few days before the murder. This witness by the recognition of her own handwriting upon the label on the box in which the body of the infant was found completed the absolute identification of that.

BIG COUP PLANNED MAY REVOLUTIONIZE GRAIN TRADE

Manitoba Grain Growers Propose to Operate the C.P.R. Elevators—President of Grain Growers Association Makes Statement.

Winnipeg, Oct. 9.—A remarkable revolution in the grain trade is about to be realized, which will give the farmers control of the terminal elevators, for which they have been clamoring.

"There is a strong probability that the C.P.R. terminal elevators at Fort William will be operated by the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association, and that the farmers' wheat of western Canada will be handled through those elevators next season. The capacity of the C.P.R. elevators, I believe, is about 9,000,000 bushels, and with them in our hands the farmers of western Canada will have all the necessary equipment to take the grain from the producers and land it at Liverpool, or the consuming market, and at the same time be assured that the grain will arrive on the other side, or in the eastern Canadian markets, in its original state, namely, as it left the farmers' hands."

This was the sattement made yesterday by Mr. D. W. McCuaig, president of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association.

"This advanced move on the part of the grain-growers is merely a step, albeit a strong one, in the organization which the farmers of the west are making for the handling of their own grain. We have for a number of years been dissatisfied with the methods pursued by certain dealers who handle a large part of the western grain. It is true that the farmers, by co-operation, have secured redress for many of their grievances, but there is still much to be done. There is a strong feeling throughout the entire west among the farmers that they must have a complete mechanism for wheat marketing under their own control."

In reply to a request as to the value of the C.P.R. terminals at Fort William, Mr. McCuaig pointed out that at the investigation before the Board of Railway Commissioners in Ottawa, on July 7, 1909, Mr. Lanigan fixed a valuation of $2,398,947 upon the site, track and plant, so, in all probability, this would be the latest figure. "The earnings of the C.P.R. terminals at Fort William have been about 3 per cent. upon the invested capital, so I presume that the grain-growers will be able to secure them (if the C.P.R. decide to lease them) at a very moderate rental."

DOES GERMANY WANT WAR? REVENTLOW'S STATEMENT

Berlin, Oct. 9.—Count Reventlow, after reading extracts of speeches made in the United States by Lord Northcliffe, Moberly Bell and Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, in which they expressed the belief that war between Great Britain and Germany was inevitable, said:

"War is certain if England declares it. Otherwise it is not at all certain. On the contrary, Germany will do everything to avoid it." Count Reventlow is a retired naval officer of Germany.

"The two power standard may be logical if the two enemies are here in Europe, close together, but it fails of efficiency if, for example, one enemy is here and the other in the orient.

"That raises for England the question of Indian and Japan. Who knows but that the United States might not some day be taken into consideration in some complex international difficulty? In this connection let me say I believe that many oratorical Englishmen sometimes say Germany when they mean the United States."

CHURCH LAW IN DOMINION

THE LOCAL OPTION MOVEMENT IN THE CITY

The Matter Appearing in This Department is Furnished by the Peterboroug Temperance and Moral Reform League Which Has Arranged for its Publication.

IS PETERBORO' TOO LARGE FOR LOCAL OPTION?

A prominent Peterborough citizen this week expressed a fear that Peterborough is too large a city to attempt to enforce a local option by-law. People who have such apprehensions cannot be acquainted with the conditions that exist in large cities that have been under local option for years.

There are only about 20 open bars in Peterborough. In Memphis, Tenn., there were 700. On the 1st of July this year Memphis adopted prohibition.

The official record of the police department show that during this first month under the new State law, with its former seven hundred saloons outlawed, arrests for drunkenness were were 61 as compared with 164 during July, 1908, under wide-open conditions.

WOULD IT HURT THE HOTELS?

The fear that was expressed a few years ago that the adoption of local option would put the hotels out of business has been disproved by the results that have followed in centres where local option exists. In many of these centres the hotel accommodation to-day is far superior to what it ever was before.

Bowmanville adopted local option on May 1st of this year. A committee of citizens had previously been formed at once to secure possession of one of the leading hotels. A joint stock company has since been organised, a considerable sum of money spent in refitting and making other improvements and the hotel is now being run as a first class hotel on strictly temperance principles. Commercial travellers who now visit Bowmanville praise the accommodation of the new hotel highly. Hotels, stables and sheds have been repaired and a trustworthy man employed to look after the interest of the public and sheds are free as formerly.

At Winchester, Ont., since the adoption of local option what is said to be the finest hotel between Montreal and Kingston, not including Ottawa, has been erected. Owen Sound has also provided splendid accommodation for the travelling public. Already the advisability of providing high-class hotel accommodation in Peterborough after the adoption of local option should such action be deemed necessary, has been discussed, and it is stated that ample capital will be forth-coming if required. The same is true of hotel stables for farmer's rigs.

ANOTHER ILLUSTRATION

The Charlottetown Guardian, in a recent article dealing with the results of the prohibitory law, which now governs the whole province, says:

The law has proved to be most beneficial in this city. In the old days, with 2,000 less people, we kept sixteen policemen. Now we have but six—one on duty at the police station at night, another there by day, and only two patrolmen on duty by day and two by night about the city.

All the evils predicted to result from prohibition have failed to materialise. It was said prohibition would only lead to more drunkenness; that we should have no decent hotels, that it would injure trade and so on. We have reduced the arrests for drunkenness to one-fourth or one-fifth of what they were under license; trade is better and larger, payments more prompt, we have better hotels, better streets and sidewalks, better fire and light service than ever before.

Doubters have been convinced and former opponents converted to prohibition. The law has the support of all the better element of the people and of the clergy, Protestant and Catholic alike. "It has made good." No political party and no man of either party among our thirty members of the Legislature has in seven years past, or will now, propose to repeal it.

Year after year it has been strengthened by amendments proposed by the temperance people. The inspector in this city was appointed on the recommendation of the Temperance Alliance. The liquor interest has almost ceased to be a political factor in the city or province.

Some liquor is imported for the province has not the power to prohibit the importation. Tourists, travellers and sailors bring it in here, and at Summerside, and the small outports. Some dishonest druggists and doctors gave trouble for a time, but convictions and exposures have checked this. There is no open sale.

Many a poor drunkard has lived to bless the prohibitory law, while wives and children bless it too. The temperance people unanimously declare it to be the best weapon yet placed in their hands with which to fight the liquor traffic. All the daily newspapers, three in number, now cordially support the law on its merits, though two of them were opposed to it a few years ago.

LOCAL OPTION CONDITIONS INVESTIGATED

Like Peterborough, the citizens of Georgetown, Ont., intend to vote on local option next January. Mr. R. J. Creelman, of that town, has been investigating the working of the local option law in some other places. In a recent interview with a representative of the Georgetown Herald, he said:—

"I visited Owen Sound, Durham, Priceville and Flesherton. In Owen Sound, the impression I got was that local option was a decided success. The town is growing very fast, and business people are enjoying a large and growing trade. I found also that some homes that under license were in a sad condition through the head of the home being a drinker, have been transformed under local option. The head of the house has quit drinking, new furniture has been purchased, and in one case that came under my notice $250 has been deposited in the bank.

"In Durham I found there was some drinking, but the six business men to whom I spoke said there is not a fraction of the drinking there was under license. The depression in the cement business is being felt in the town, otherwise business men are not complaining. In Flesherton and Priceville I consulted quite a number of citizens. The testimony was that the moral tone of these places had been greatly improved. The taking away of the liquor had helped men to keep sober. One storekeeper said he was getting a lot of money that formerly went over the bar, and his cash business had improved. Mr. Creelman is very enthusiastic over local option."

DOES LOCAL OPTION PAY?

Those people who are afraid that if Local Option is granted in Peterborough there will be a loss of revenue from the sale of licenses overlook the fact that there is an even greater saving effected in other ways. York, Neb., is a Local Option town. It has recently adopted this method of advertising. On an attractive picture post card is the picture of a policeman and under it the following inscription —"Entire police force, York, Neb., a city of 8,500 people."

The same post card contains the following items of information concerning the city:—

Fifteen Years of Agony

"Fruit-a-tives" Promptly Cured Him After Doctors Had Failed To Give Relief.

CHARLES BARRETT, Esq.

Harbor au Bouche,
Antigonish Co., N.S., March 24, 1909.

"I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the great benefit I received from taking "Fruit-a-tives." I suffered from Biliousness and Dyspepsia for fifteen years and I consulted physicians and took many kinds of ordinary medicine, but got no relief. I was in miserable health all the time and nothing did me any good. I read the testimonial of Archibald McKechnie, of Ottawa, and I decided to try "Fruit-a-tives." I have taken a number of boxes of "Fruit-a-tives," but before I had taken one box I felt better and now am entirely well.

"I am thankful to be well after fifteen years suffering, and I am willing to have this statement published for the sake of other sufferers, and to them I strongly recommend "Fruit-a-tives."

Stop Women And Consider

This Fact — that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman — a woman whose experience with women's diseases covers twenty-five years.

The present Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, was for years under her direction, and has ever since her decease continued to advise women.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty causes them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. Such questioning and examination is unnecessary. Without cost you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION:

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established this confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Never has she published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which Mrs. Pinkham has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge needed in your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Mrs. Pinkham, care of Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

SPORTING NEWS

BRUSSELS WON FIRST GAME FROM THE HAVELOCK TEAM

Special to the Review.

Havelock, Oct. 8.—The first game in the finals for the intermediate football championship of Ontario took place at Brussels to-day when that town defeated Havelock by a score of 1—0, the goal for Brussels being scored on a foul which was allowed by Referee Dabbs, of Toronto.

Although Havelock did not hold Brussels down to a no score game as they would have liked to have done, nevertheless they have made a good showing and hope to turn the tables on Brussels when they come here and eventually win out on the round. The journey of 225 miles to Brussels is a tiresome one and may have accounted for Brussels even getting a shot on Havelock's goal. The fact that the goal that Brussels scored was done on a foul may make the game a no score one if a protest is entered.

Havelock have a good strong team this year having carried off the Midland league championship without losing a game and with only two goals being scored on them during the season and they will mack a good big try anyway to win out on the round. The following was the line up of the Havelock team at Brussels to-day:

Goal, W. J. Rose.

Backs, H. T. Andrews, K. McKay.

Right Wing, R. McPherson, G. Mathison.

Centre, Wm. Rose.

The date of the return game has not yet been set, but will likely be the latter part of next week.

YANKEE ROGERS ONE OF THREE

Who Grappled With Zbysco, the Galacian Wrestler

Buffalo, N.Y., Oct. 7.—Zbysco, the Galician wrestling champion, who has come to America in the hope of a match with Frank Gotch, to-night defeated Pete Wissamp, Walter Smith and Yankee Rogers, three local heavyweights, in 14 minutes, 1.10, 7.50 and 5 respectively. They wrestled catch-as-catch can, but to-night's work did not give a good line on the foreigner's ability at this style.

THE TRIGGER

The Hiawatha Gun Club paid a visit to the city yesterday, coming by way of the river, through the kindness of Mr. Wedlock, who brought them up in his yacht. During the afternoon a match was shot with the Peterborough Gun Club. A finer day for a shoot could not have been had, and some good scores were made. Mr. M. Howard made the high score of 23, winning the hat presented by Mr. Cyril Leech, for the highest individual score. The competition throughout the match was most exciting, resulting in a victory for the visitors by ten shots.

Hamilton Tigers should win at Ottawa to-day, but they will have their work cut out for them. The Rough Riders generally manage to win at home by hook or by crook, but it looks as if they will be up against it in earnest this afternoon at Varsity Oval.

The senior O.R.F.U. season will open at Toronto this afternoon when the T.A.A.C. team will meet the Parkdale Canoe Club. T.A.A.C. should win without much difficulty. The Parkdale team will play here a week from to-day.

What Happened When Shadby Lost His Patience.

The barber had performed the operation with skill and dexterity, and as he was about to drop the foot rest and bolt Shadby upright he happened to think of his stereotyped list of questions and began:

"Face massage, sir?"

"No, not today."

"Hair singed?"

"No."

"Shampoo?"

"No."

"Electric scalp treatment?"

"No."

"Dipp's dandruff cure? Beg pardon, sir, but you need it."

"No, not today."

"Faker's skin food?"

"No."

"Manicure or shoe shine?" (Silence.)

"Hair and mustache dyed?"

By this time Shadby had lost all patience, and, whirling on the innocent talking machine, he shouted: "No, no, no! I don't want any of the things you rattled off, nor do I want a Turkish bath or to be measured for a suit. I don't want my teeth filed nor a third leg grafted on. I don't want to be fitted to spectacles nor take a chance in a lottery. I came in to get a shave, and I asked for a shave. If I had wanted a glass eye put in I would have asked you. S-h-a-v-e, that's what I wanted. Now proceed with the comb and brush finale!"—Boston Globe.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

THE MONTAGNAIS INDIANS.

Little Known Tribe Spend Most of Their Time In the "Bush."

The Montagnais Indians, dwelling for the most part on the shores of the Lower St. Lawrence, are very little known. As a rule they are considered an unintelligent tribe and are rather looked down upon by the Crees, Iroquois and Nasquapies. Although not perhaps so thrifty as the Crees nor so educated as the Iroquois, they are far from being unintelligent, having taught themselves to read and write, and being remarkably quick at figures.

These Indians live for the greater part of the year in the interior of the forest, only coming out to the Hudson Bay Co.'s posts for about three months in the summer to trade their fur for such things as they require for another sojourn in the interior and to see their priest.

They leave again for the "bush" in August after having been advanced provisions and clothing by the Hudson Bay Co. and proceed by canoe up the largest rivers (usually the St. Johns or the Romaine rivers) until they reach the height of land, where they camp until the snow comes and they are able to continue their journey on snowshoes, carrying their provisions, clothing and tents on toboggans, men, women and children all carrying their share of the load. The very small children are carried on their mothers' backs, wrapped in fawn skins and laced up in bags made of the same. This bag the mother carries suspended by a thick thong of caribou hide tied around her forehead.

They do not travel very great distances at a time, unless hungry and in search of caribou, for although the men are fast walkers the women do not walk as fast as an average Canadian girl can.

These Indians usually travel in bands of fifty families until they reach the height of land, where they separate, each family going to its respective hunting ground to hunt and trap fur for the remainder of the winter. They camp in large tents made of caribou skins scraped clean of the hair and sewed together. These tents are well banked with snow from the outside to keep out all wind, while spruce boughs make a sweet, warm flooring. In the middle of the floor flat stones are placed as a foundation for the camp fire, the smoke and sparks escaping from a hole left for that purpose at the top of the tent between the tepee-poles.

The cooking on these fires is, of course, very primitive, "bannocks" being made by the squaws instead of bread. "Bannocks" consist of flour and water and a little lard, mixed rather thick and cooked on a hot stone. In the summer the squaws make excellent bread, which they bake in the sand.

High Sea Therapeutics.

There was an old sea-dog, the captain of a freighter, who used to make the port of Montreal quite often, and who was well known to all the marine reporters as a character. He was a French-Canadian, of the hardy Gulf stock, which takes to the sea by hereditary instinct, and all his family were sailors. A number of stories are told of this man and his career, which dated back to the days of "wind-jammers." He was even in the smuggling business for a while, and they say that once when asked as to the seamanlike qualities of his first mate, a splendid type of young French-Canadian, he answered:

"Is he a good sailor? Why, nom de dieu, he is one of the best what there are—is he not a smuggler?"

But one of the best yarns told of the captain, is his account of the entire futility of the medicine chests required by law on such boats as do not carry a surgeon.

"They are no good," he is reported to have said, "no good for nothing in the world. Last trip one of my men get sick. I look at his disease in the book of directions, and it say give him so much of Number Twelve: I look at bottle Number Twelve, and it is all empty. I therefore take half a dose of Number Seven and half a dose of Number Five, and I mix them. What you think happen then? Why, corbleu, that fellow he is die!"

A Real Sourdough.

During the past week Col. Donald MacGregor, one of the best known of Yukon and British Columbia prospectors, spent a few days in Toronto on his way from Regina, where he has lived for the past year, to his old home in Glengarry County, Ontario. The colonel is a real old-timer. He first went West over fifty years ago, going by way of the Isthmus of Panama. A cousin of his made the biggest strike in the Cariboo district when gold was first discovered there. This man was afterwards known all over the north and west as Cariboo Cameron, and Mr. MacGregor, then a youth, hearing of his kinsman's success, caught the gold fever, and started out on his remarkable and adventurous career. For many years he was one of the most active men on the Coast, working not only for himself but for the advancement of British Columbia. During the Robson regime he was colonization agent in the province, and founded the Squamish valley settlement, now a thriving community. He was also prominent in organizing a capable militia force on the Coast.

Jury Fix Value.

Cobourg, Oct. 9.—In the suit of Bigelow v. Powers and the Pioneer Threshing Syndicate of Clarke Township, the jury fixed Bigelow's loss at $3,301 for his burned barn. The fire was due to a spark from the threshing outfit, and the insurance companies declined to be held responsible for the full amount.

Election Pledge In Catechism.

Paris, Oct. 9.—Some of the French bishops, following up a more militant policy, have introduced into the catechism the obligation to vote only for candidates who have publicly pledged themselves to the defence of religious interests.

Police Chief Bunting, of Renfrew, has resigned.

To Get Higher Price.

Glace Bay, N.S., Oct. 9.—J. H. Plummer is in Sydney and Jas. Ross is here. The urgent business of both is to settle the new price for coal, under the agreement from 30th June last, for the next five years. While nothing definite can be obtained from either party, the general opinion is that the Dominion Coal Co. are confident that they will receive a very much increased price for their coal, somewhere between $1.75 and $2 per ton, or from 50 to 75 cents above the price received to 30th June last.

To Fight Legislation.

Halifax, Oct. 9. Representatives of all fire insurance offices in Halifax at a meeting approved of the proposed Canadian federation to fight obnoxious insurance legislation, and appointed G. E. Faulkner, M.P.P., and W. E. Thompson, two of a committee of three as local executive. Another meeting will be called here, which local Senators and members of Parliament will be invited to attend. Meetings will be held in other parts of the province.

Two Children Are Killed.

St. Thomas, Oct. 9.—A ten-year-old lad, son of W. H. White, was instantly killed Thursday at the Alvinston Fair. He was kicked in the face by a horse.

Wilhemina, the two-year-old daughter of Wellington Annett, near Alvinston, met death by breaking her neck by crawling through a fence. Her foot slipped and her chin caught in a board.

Bye-Election Preparing.

Montreal, Oct. 9.—F. D. Monk, M.P., leader of the French-Conservatives, returned from Quebec yesterday, and reports that the party is in splendid fighting trim in the ancient capital. The mistake in Montcalm will not be repeated in the County of Lotbiniere, where a candidate will be nominated in a few days. Hon. L. P. Pelletier, who contested at the general federal elections, will not run against. Fortier, the unseated member, will again be the Liberal candidate.

Let Missionaries Learn Language.

Ottawa, Oct. 9.—Rev. T. E. Egerton Shore, at the Canadian Methodist Mission Board, said yesterday that he would like that their missionaries should preach and conduct services in the native language when in Japan. He would give them two clear years in which to learn the language.

He recommended seventeen men there instead of the ten. The Japanese native pastors lacked incentive.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 9.—The Grand Trunk Railway have secured an option on the Rhode Island Railway, the first step toward establishing a terminal at Providence.

St. Thomas, Oct. 9.—Rev. Hall Wood of Tavistock has been given a call by the congregation of Alma street Presbyterian Church.

Mistaken For a Deer.

Saranac Lake, N.Y., Oct. 9.—A lamentable gunning accident occurred near here yesterday, when Henry Lewis, Clearlake Junction, was supposedly mistaken for a deer and fatally shot at Little Fish Pond, 12 miles from this place.

Five Burned to Death.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 9.—Five persons were burned to death in a fire which destroyed a brick dwelling house here yesterday. Two negroes were arrested on suspicion in connection with the origin of the fire.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

The Bachelor

Clyde Fitch's delightful comedy, "The Bachelor," was presented at the Grand Opera House last evening and a large audience was highly pleased with the production. Here and there the play is a little impossible, but on the whole it is very clever, and affords delightful entertainment for an evening. The plot hinges on the awakening of the love of a bachelor for his stenographer. In the first act the bachelor affirms that marrying is the last thing in the world he would think about, in the second act he is not quite so settled in his mind on the point, and in the third and last act he is quite certain that he wants to marry his stenographer, who is a young lady of good family but in reduced circumstances, on account of losing all they possessed in the San Francisco earthquake. The part of the bachelor is taken by Mr. Charles Cherry, who gave an excellent delineation of the role. His comedy work was refined, yet very appealing. Miss Ruth Maycliffe was delightful as Jenny Wilson, the stenographer. She has a pleasing voice and presence, and appeared to advantage in both light and heavy parts of the play. The supporting members of the company were in keeping with the high class of the stars, and all insinuated themselves into the good grace of the audience.

The scenic embellishments added greatly to the production. Each act had a splendid setting, the second one being especially beautiful.

"The Bachelor" was voted by local theatre-goers as one of the most pleasing attractions of its kind seen here seen here in a long time.

Twenty Big Musical Numbers

Among the twenty big musical numbers contained in George M. Cohan's "The Honeymooners," which will be seen at the "Grand" next Wednesday evening, Oct. 13th, are such emphatic Broadway hits as "Kid Days," "Let's Take an Old Fashioned Walk," "Make a Lot of Noise," "In a One Night Stand," "I'll be There in the Public Square," and "If I'm a Goin' to Die I'm Goin' to Have Some Fun." Despite the great number of musical numbers, Cohan has found room for a growing plot that is logical and coherent throughout, and holds the interest. He also indulges in delicious satire at the expense of Tigerville, Vermont, where the story takes place, and he introduced a long gallery of brilliant character types ranging from a prohibition candidate for Mayor to a stranded actress. "The Honeymooners" was played all last summer at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York, and was hailed by Broadway as the greatest of all the Cohan song shows. The public support given the production made new records for the box office receipts. "The Honeymooners" will be seen here precisely as at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York City.

TRAVELLER GOES TO GAOL FOR SPEAKING TO PORT HOPE GIRL WHOM HE DID NOT KNOW

Port Hope, Oct. 8.—A commercial man of Montreal was in the Police Court this morning. The charge was that he did loiter on Ontario street and obstruct a passenger, a lady to him personally unknown, by using insulting language, asking if he might see her home and by speaking to her three times.

The prisoner admitted asking the lady if he might see her home but he did not use any insulting language. He had met the lady coming out of the Postoffice and he was certain that she smiled and bowed to him. He then went to Mr. M. P. Wickett's store on business and when returning he met the lady and spoke to her. He did speak to her three times but the only remark was the request to accompany her home.

His Honor remarked that he was certain that the prisoner was not aware of the seriousness of his offence. Mothers and sisters must be protected from strangers of this kind. The prisoner was commitied to jail for one month.

This is quite an unfortunate case. The prisoner is the representative of a first-class grocery firm and this is his first trip through this district. In town he did quite a large business securing orders from nearly every grocer. He is a married man living in Montreal and his imprisonment will no doubt mean the loss of a good position.

CHARGED WITH SELLING LIQUOR IN PROHIBITED HOURS

Proprietor of Cavanagh House in Police Court This Morning—Witness Stated He Asked for and Received Flask of Whisky From the Proprietor—Defendant Denied Having Sold Liquor.

The proprietor of the Cavanagh House was charged in the Police Court this morning with having sold liquor in prohibited hours, viz., between the hour of seven o'clock p.m. on Saturday, September 25th, and the following Sunday morning at six o'clock.

Mr. Jas. Haverson, of Toronto, appeared for the defendant and asked that the case be enlarged as two witnesses for the defence were unable to be present. One was in Toronto and the other sick in bed. He was not in favor of the prosecution putting in their evidence.

Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., acting for the prosecution asked that the case be proceeded with and William Dickson was called.

The evidence.

WILLIAM DICKSON.

I was at Cavanagh's hotel on Saturday, Sept. 25th, in company with Andrew Brotherson. The time was 7.50 p.m. I spoke to Mr. Timothy Cavanagh and asked him for a bottle of whiskey and he gave it to me, after the crowd had gone out of the sitting room. I asked him for the whiskey when he was in the sitting room. He went into a small room and gave me a flask. Brotherson was present and saw the whole transaction. I paid 25c. for the flask of whiskey, I had no medical requisition.

To Mr. Haverson:—

I was served with a subpoena to attend this trial by Mr. Stewart at my home in Westwood. I drove from my home to this city on that day on business. I didn't meet Brotherson by appointment, but cannot say just where. I didn't go home that night, but arrived there on Sunday. I didn't have any particular reason for going to Cavanagh's hotel. I tasted the whiskey in the flask.

"What did you do with the flask?

I refuse to answer the question.

You must, ordered the Magistrate.

Well, then, I'll tell you.

Mr. Stewart met me on the sidewalk and asked me up to his office. This was immediately after I left Cavanagh's. The meeting was not by appointment and I did not tell him I was going to the hotel. When we arrived at the office I gave him the bottle just as I received it and I suppose he kept it. I knew it was after seven o'clock when I entered the hotel and always understood it was illegal to ask for liquor on Saturday night.

Why didn't you get the bottle before seven?

I didn't want it.

Where did you meet Stewart?

I couldn't say.

I went into the hotel by way of a door in the rear and came out the same way.

Did Brotherson know what you went in for?

I can't recollect.

What were you and Brotherson talking about.

I refuse to say.

Cavanagh brought out a $1 bottle first, but went back and returned with the 25c. flask. When I got the whiskey I was at a door between the little room and the wash-room.

What was he there for?

I can't tell.

I went right out of the hotel after getting the whiskey.

When the defendent was called he denied having sold any liquor at the time mentioned and further stated that neither of the men asked him for any liquor.

The case was adjourned till three o'clock.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

SUN SPOTS, AURORA BOREALIS AND EARTHQUAKE TOGETHER

There are spots on the sun at present as large as the obstacles the aldermen say are in the way of building the isolation hospital at once. The spots are thousands of miles in extent, and are being observed with much interest by the members of the local Astronomical society. The fact that there was a brilliant display of the aurora borealis last night about eight o'clock adds interest to the presence of the sunspots, for it has been pretty well established that the "Northern Lights" made when there are marked disturbances on the solar surface.

The despatches yesterday also told of an earthquake in Wales. It has frequently been noted that earthquakes are reported when there are sun spots, but it has not yet been definitely established that there is any connection between the two.

CHAMPIONSHIPS WON BY M. O'BRIEN AND H. HILL

At Collegiate Institute Field Day Held Yesterday—New Records Made—W. Armstrong Added 11 3-5 Inches to Pole Vaulting Record—Splendid Programme of Athletic Events.

The champion athletes of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute have been decided again, and Michael O'Brien and Harold Hill will hold the senior and junior cups, emblematic of these two much-coveted honors. The annual field day of sports yesterday decided the winners. Both students had made a splendid record in the events held on Monday and Tuesday, and their performances yesterday were greeted with much applause by the large number of their fellow-students and friends who were present at Riverside Park. The weather was ideal, and it was a great day for the wearers of the garnet and grey. The race for junior honors was very close, the two nearest contestants being Hill and Nagle Phelan, and the winner was not decided until the last junior event, when Hill took second place from Laing in the one mile race. Phelan finally won out, but Hill's three points for second place put him one point ahead of his rival, thereby winning the championship for him. O'Brien established a new record for the senior high jump, creating a mark of 4 feet 11 inches, which was one inch better than the previous record.

The feature of the senior events was the pole vaulting of Wallace Armstrong. By some particularly fine work he added 11 3-4 inches to the record of 7 feet 2 1-4 inches, made last year, and probably would have made the even foot had he not strained his wrist in the last vault.

Roy Dixon took one second off the record for the senior one mile race, which he won in easy fashion. The juniors only broke one record: the honor going to Nagle Phelan, who lowered the time for the 220 yards event by one second.

George Minorgan won the open event for throwing the baseball. Those taking part had to keep the ball within the 100 yards course, and this proved to be a big handicap to most of the contestants. H. O'Brien made a throw of 96 yards but it was a short distance outside the lines.

Only one team was entered in the inter-form relay race. A team representing 3 Form, composed of Scott, Fessenden and Conroy, made the distance in 4 min. 2-5 seconds.

The 100 yards race for the Collegiate girls brought out a dozen entries and furnished some nerve-racking heats. Miss Kelly took first, Miss Mowat second and Miss Edmison third.

The officials are to be congratulated on the splendid manner in which they conducted the different events, and the students for the fine showing they made.

It was expected that Mr. Walter Hughes, the cornet soloist of the 57th Regimental Band, would have been here from Vernon, B.C., the first of the month, but he was detained longer than he thought he would be. Archer M. Huntington, president of the American Geographical Society, discussed the proposition for a simultaneous examination of Dr. Cook's report.

ANOTHER STONE THROWING AFFAIR

Sequel to a Former Case in which the Defendant was Fined

Thomas Ross was recently fined in the police court for throwing stones, but this morning, his mother, on behalf of her boy, was the complainant in another stone throwing affair, in which she stated that her son had been struck by Douglas Cunningham.

The case was dismissed.

Mrs. Ross, who resides on Gladstone Avenue, said Douglas Cunningham hit her boy with a stone and injured him so severely that he cried. This was on last Tuesday morning. Percy Cunningham also threw stones after her boy had been fined for the same offence.

"Did you tell your neighbors that you would wait for a chance to get even with Mrs. Cunningham?" asked the father of the accused boy. "No, I did not," replied the witness.

Robert Ross hadn't thrown any stones after being fined, but the Cunningham boy had thrown stones at him.

"Well, you all deserve a good trouncing, and that's what you will get if you come here again," was the Magistrate's judgment.

THEY LEFT THE GREENBACKS IN HAMILTON

It is learned that several members of the company which presented "The Bachelor" at the Grand Opera House last night, placed some greenbacks on a sure thing bet at Hamilton yesterday, and left the money with the bookies. The horse that was backed did not get a place. Perhaps it was the loss of the "Cobalt" that drove Charles Cherry to marry the girl.

REMARKABLE FEAT IN SONAMBULISM

Thos Doyle, Aged 82, Walks From Perth to Lanark in His Sleep

This week's Perth Courier contains the following story of a remarkable feat in somnambulism:—

One of the most remarkable cases of somnambulism on record is that of Mr. Thomas Doyle, of town. In last Saturday morning's early hours he walked from Perth to Lanark in his sleep, a distance of twelve miles. Mr. Doyle lives on Basin street, and on Saturday morning about 12.30 he was heard to leave the house. Opening a window one of the family he lives with called him, but Mr. Doyle paid no attention and went his way. As soon as the ladies could dress, they started after him, and notified neighbors. No one saw him go by, and he was lost sight of, and nothing was heard of him until ten o'clock in the morning, when Mr. James Noonan, drover, telephoned from Lanark that Mr. Doyle was at Dobbie's Hotel. The news was a great relief to his relatives here, for it was feared he might have walked into the river, and to make doubly sure of that the basin was dragged for a time.

Mr. Doyle only wore a pair of light cashmere socks, a pair of trousers and nightshirt, and a touque, which he dons always at nighttime. He had on no other clothing, and when it is remembered that a drizzling rain fell nearly all night it will be seen the clothing was little enough. He did not have his glasses or cane, which he always wears and uses when walking.

Mr. Doyle strange to say, followed the road, and when he reached Lanark he was foot sore. The road is a stone one all the way.

The most remarkable part is that Mr. Doyle is in his 82nd year, and is not a fast walker. When all these facts are taken into consideration—the distance (12 miles), the state of the weather, the condition of the roads, and the age of the man, it stands out as the most remarkable feat of somnambulism told.

Mr. Doyle was brought into town on Saturday afternoon, feeling stiff and sore, but not suffering any ill-effects.

Mr. Doyle is a retired farmer and a native of Drummond. His wife is dead, and for the past few years he has been residing in town. He farmed a number of years in Drummond and at one time near Smith's Falls.

HOW INCOME PER COW CAN BE DOUBLED

Several instances are on record in Ontario and Quebec where members of cow-testing associations, who are systematically weighing and sampling the milk from each individual cow in the herd have been enabled to increase the yield of milk per cow tremendously. Mere weighing and sampling, of course, has not increased the yield, but it has been the most important factor in the general improvement; it has shown that some of cows were not worth keeping, it has shown that others could profitably consume more good feed, it has shown the owners that they must study each cow to make her do her best, it has shown them that most cows will respond readily to better care and attention and will earn more money if given the opportunity. It means good money in any farmer's pocket if he will have a little patience and act on the information gained from the records. One man is now getting from his twenty cows an income of four hundred and eighty dollars per year more than he was three years ago. A smaller herd in 1904 brought in only $23.80 per cow, but last year the owner received nearly $58 per cow in other words he is now getting more than double the previous income per cow. C.F.W.

KELSEY

HEATING

¶Is your home warmed satisfactorily? If not, the chances are that it will pay you to discard the old apparatus entirely and replace it with a KELSEY.

¶The principles of hygienic heating and fuel economy are better understood now than when thousands of heaters in use were built. The KELSEY is the embodiment of the highest attainments of heating engineering.

¶The KELSEY Zig-Zag Heat Tubes of which the fire box is formed and by which greater volumes of air are warmed and FORCED to every part of the house than is possible in any other heater, saves you enough in coal bills to more than pay for the change, to say nothing of the comfort of having your house kept at just the right temperature from top to bottom all the time. Let us prove it to you.

W.C.T.U. ELECTED OFFICERS AT ITS REGULAR MEETING

Yesterday afternoon a very largely attended meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union was held in the Y.M.C.A. building. Mrs. Campbell occupied the chair, and after devotion the work of the Union was carefully surveyed.

Very interesting references were made concerning the good work done by the White Ribbon Tidings and the members were exhorted to take a deeper interest in its extension, as it was known that a temperance paper would do more effective work for the home.

The president of the Peterborough Moral and Social Reform League gave a rapid survey of what has already been done in the local option campaign, and outlined the work that had been projected for the remaining weeks of the year. Great and unbounded enthusiasm was struck home to the hearts of all present when it was announced that Governor Glenn, the man of affairs, who carried North Carolina by a majority of 40,000 for prohibition, would spend two days in Peterborough in the near future.

The Union unanimously decided to join in the Women's Prayer Circle to be conducted in the parlors of the Y.W.C.A., every Sunday afternoon while the mass meetings are being held in the Opera House. These meetings will be started after Dr. Crafts has opened the campaign.

It was unanimously decided to accept the offer of the league to provide the speaker for the opera house mass meeting on Sunday, October 24th, while Miss Sproule, the courteous and indefatigable missionary of the Ontario W.C.T.U., among the lumbermen and miners of Northern Ontario, will be the speaker.

The officers elected were as follows:
Hon. President—Mrs. Kenner
President—Mrs. Campbell.
1st Vice-President—Mrs. Ellis.
2nd Vice-President—Mrs. J. G. Potter.
Rec.—Miss Lumsden.
Cor.-Sec.—Mrs M. A. Turner.
Treas.—Miss P. Downham.

Delegates were appointed to the convention, which will be held at Belleville on October 19 to 21, and their reports will be read at the next meeting of the W.C.T.U. on Friday, October 29.

FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT

A NEW WONDER WHAT IS IT?

Grand Forks, N.D., Oct. 7.—In compliance with a proclamation of Gov. Burke, North Dakotans to-day ate durum wheat only. This proclamation was issued in compliance with a request of the grain-growers of North and South Dakota and Minnesota for the purpose of establishing durum as a bread grain. The day was observed throughout the state. All bread and wheat foods were made of durum, and the sales of that quality of flour in consequence were heavy. (A widespread interest has been taken by the farmers in pushing the sale of durum as with the price equal to that of other varieties of wheat, the income from their land would be much increased. A test to-day showed it to be equal to standard hard varieties for bread and other food products.

Pittsburg Wins First.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 9.—The first engagement in the series of games for the chief honors in baseball took place on Forbes' Field here yesterday afternoon, and was won by the Pittsburgs. The National League pennant winners defeated the Detroits by a score of 4 to 1. They were superior to the Tigers in fielding and in the timeliness of their hitting, and won for these reasons.

Neither side did anything impressive with the bat, but the pitching on both sides was strictly championship ball, and the fielding of the Pirates was in every way up to the standard expected from champions. Steadier than the Detroits in supporting their pitcher, the Pittsburgs also performed without a mistake in the field, whereas the Detroits made three errors and each was costly.

Princes Woo Heiress.

New York, Oct. 9.—The American says: Two noblemen of the blood royal, one a kinsman of the Russian Czar, the other backed by the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, have opened formal negotiations with Geo. Gould as suitors for the hand of his daughter, the winsome Miss Marjorie, according to cable advices received from Paris and London.

One is Francis Joseph, brother of Prince Miguel of Braganza, who recently married Miss Anita Stewart. The other is Prince Alexander Georgievitch Romanowski, who is also Duke of Leuchtenberg.

Both are preparing to visit America.

Aged Painter's Fatal Fall.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 9.—The struggle with poverty waged by M. C. Wright, 65 years old, ended when he fell 35 feet from a fire escape and died while on the way to the hospital. He was a painter, and in stepping to a ladder, lost his balance. Wright came to Detroit from Goderich, Ont. He has a married daughter.

Year For Manslaughter.

London, Oct. 9.—Joseph Ward was sentenced to one year in Central Prison yesterday morning by Justice Latchford for manslaughter. Ward is only 24 years of age, and has always borne an excellent reputation as a quiet, hard-working young farmer.

Factory Hand Injured.

Kingston, Oct. 7.—While working a buzz-saw at Wornwith's piano factory, Walter Robinson, aged 27, sustained serious injuries. He was cutting wood when a block flew from the saw and struck him in the abdomen.

GOOD BLOOD AND GOOD HEALTH

Is the Result Obtained When Dr William's Pink Pills Are Used

To have good health you must have good blood. It is only when the blood is bad that the health is poor. The blood is the life-giving fluid of the body—it is therefore an absolute necessity that it should be kept free from all impurities and poisons. To do this nothing can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. These Pills make new, rich blood with every dose; they drive out every impurity—every poison—and thus give good health. Concerning them Miss Bernadette Lapointe, of St. Jerome, Que., says;—"For several years my health was very bad—my system was completely run down. I had indigestion almost continually; my heart was weak; I had headaches and backaches, and was sore all over. My blood was very poor and more than once I was in despair. I tried many supposed remedies, but none of them helped me. One day a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, telling me that she had found them good in a case similar to mine. I followed her advice and began taking the pills. They soon gave me some slight relief. Encouraged by this I continued their use for several months, and they strengthened by whole system. I am to-day in excellent health and always keep Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the house, for if I feel a little out of sorts I take a box of Pills and am soon all right again."

Thousands of young girls throughout Canada suffer just as Miss Lapointe did. They are sickly all the time and are totally unable to take the enjoyment out of life that every healthy girl should. They need a tonic to build them up—to enable them to withstand the worries of household or business duties; to give them strength to enjoy social life. Such a tonic is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. These Pills give blood to bloodless girls; they strengthen the nerves; banish headaches and backaches; cure indigestion, rheumatism, heart palpitation and relieve the many ills of girlhood and womanhood. Sold by all medicine dealers or direct by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MEETING OF CANADIAN CLUB ON THURSDAY

The Canadian Club will meet on Thursday, October 11th, at 8 o'clock in the City Council chamber. The principal business of the meeting will be the re-organizing of the club for the winter, and the election of officers. Other important matters will also be taken up.

SAVE THE SUMMER

It's up to Canada to lengthen her summers so as to keep the tourists here, keep the people out in the open, on the lakes, and by the sea, keep the children out of school for another fortnight. To save the summer two weeks longer there would have to be some readjustments. The Toronto Fair would have to be shifted to the last half of September. This is no hardship. Many farmers and tired harvesters are crying for just that change. How about the schools? Well, there are many colleges and schools that do not open till the middle of September anyway. The longer a boy lives out in the open, the stronger and better will he be for work through the winter. Then there is the tourist business of Canada. It is worth looking after. The rich people of the United States, having discovered our beautiful summer, part from it with regret. With small coaxing they could be induced to stretch it out two weeks more. The little State of Maine is reported as collecting twelve million dollars annually from tourists and sportsmen. If Maine can do that, our last wilderness should do ten times as much. Thirteen years ago, thirty hundred tourists passed in via Toronto to the Highlands every summer. To-day these pilgrims of pleasure number thirty thousand and this is only one of Canada's great playgrounds. How many visitors are induced to cross over in winter, lured by the sparkle of Quebec and the bracing outdoor sports, we can only estimate. It is surely large. Suppose there are fifty thousand tourists travelling on our railways, living in our hotels, shopping in our shops on September 1. At the very lowest they would spend two dollars a day. A million and a half in two weeks. This is a golden stream, a Danae shower, that is worth cherishing. We take the stranger in and do well by him. If we can contrive to hold half a month longer, we can do him that much better. Therefore, save the summer.—Collier's, Sept. 18th, 1909.

One-third of the Government park at Wainwright, Alta., has been burned over by prairie fires.

Clara Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain, was married yesterday at Stamfield, Conn., to Ossip Gabrilowitch, the young Russian pianist.

INTEREST IN A METROPOLITAN NEWSPAPER'S SHORT STORY CONTEST ENCIRCLED THE GLOBE

The New York Herald Received 5,000 Manuscripts Representing Not Only Every State in the Union but Every Country in the World Where English Speaking People Reside

Readers of the Herald Decided by Ballot Which Stories Should Receive the $10,700 Prizes, and Such Enthusiasm Was Aroused That No Less Than Two Million Were Voted for the Partisans' Various Favorites

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, Saturday.

WHEN an American newspaper conducts a contest which attracts entries from every State in the Union, which arouses intense enthusiasm among clergymen and actresses, financiers and artisans, octogenarians and school children, there will be none to gainsay the statement that the paper has accomplished a notable success. But the New York Herald has not only succeeded in doing all this with its $10,700 short story competition, but a great deal more.

Interest in the Herald's remarkable undertaking was not confined to the United States; it was world wide in its scope, and the assertion is made advisedly. From the torrid jungles of Yucatan, whose denizens are for the most part the descendants of the aboriginal Caribs, and from the snowy fastnesses of the Canadian wilderness, from ancient Cairo and Pekin, and from pioneer camps in South America; from the West Indies and the isles of the South Sea; from half a dozen countries in Europe and from the Philippines—in short, from every part of the globe where English speaking people are to be found—manuscripts kept pouring into the Herald office while the entries were being received. Five thousand short stories were turned over to the committee which had the reading of the manuscripts in charge.

When a newspaper publishes 104 short stories and calls upon its readers to decide by voting on a ballot printed in the paper which stories are most worthy of prizes, and when two million such ballots are cast, it may be said without fear of contradiction that the result obtained is phenomenal. But that is precisely what took place in the Herald's competition, readers of the stories, with nothing to gain themselves and no personal interest to serve, recording their opinions not only in the United States, but in other countries.

When stories of such a calibre are entered in the contest that immediately following their publication their obscure authors, whose first attempts at literary work they were, are besought by publishers and high class magazines for contributions, the paper, it will be agreed, has performed a notable achievement. But that is exactly what happened in the Herald's competition.

From this preamble will be gained some idea of what occurred in one of the most novel and entertaining projects ever undertaken by a metropolitan or any other newspaper.

Such widespread and deep public interest was excited by the New York Herald's Anglo-American competition between Mr. Max Pemberton, of England, and Mrs. Mary Wilkins Freeman, of America, that on October 23, 1908, the Herald announced that it had decided to conduct two other competitions, "open to all American writers, but especially designed to encourage the school teachers of the country and amateur writers generally to show their strength as story tellers." It was hoped in this way, the Herald said, to help men and women, particularly young men and women, to demonstrate their ability to tell striking tales of romance and adventure who otherwise would remain mute and inglorious as writers for the public.

The announcement also said:—"It is very probable that more than one genius with the pen will thus be brought to light, to the delight of the reading world and their own great profit. Under present conditions in the magazine and newspaper field it is very difficult for an unknown writer to get a hearing."

From the stories sent in by school teachers two were chosen each week by a committee composed, not of professional manuscript readers, who might even unconsciously have foibles, but of competent literary critics. This committee also chose two stories for publication each week from the stories sent in by amateur and other American writers.

The first stories were published Sunday, January 3, and there were in all twenty-six instalments, fifty-two stories being printed in each competition, the last appearing Sunday, June 27.

The readers of the stories determined each week which of the two stories in each competition was the better, and the weekly winner was paid $75 and the writer of the other story was paid $25. Thus $200 was distributed each week as weekly prizes for twenty-six weeks, making a total of $5,200 which was so disbursed.

Keen interest was shown in the weekly prizes and thousands of ballots were cast each week. The voting for the weekly prizes continued for seventeen days after the stories were printed, sufficient time being given to allow ballots to come from the Pacific coast. Some of the weekly winners had majorities as high as five thousand votes, but there was one which won by the narrow margin of ten votes.

Besides the weekly prizes totalling $5,200 there were grand prizes amounting to $5,500, divided as follows:—For the story in each competition receiving the greatest number of grand prize votes, $2,000; for the story in each competition receiving the second largest vote, $500, and for the story in each competition receiving the third largest vote, $250. Provision was made to republish the five stories in each competition which stood highest, for the final consideration of readers, and provision was also made for the division of the prizes equally in case of a tie in the popular vote between those who were tied.

The number of votes cast for the various contests for the grand prizes was kept secret, but each day a list was printed showing the relative positions of the leaders.

The progress of the contest was reported in the Herald every day and, in addition, letters from readers commenting on the stories and criticising them were also printed. The criticisms became one of the most popular features of the competition and scores of letters were received every day from enthusiastic followers of the contest, praising their favorite stories, pointing out what they considered defects in other stories and expressing their likes, dislikes and general views on everything connected with the competition.

Another feature which met with approval was the publication of the photographs of contestants and of short biographical sketches each Sunday of the authors of the stories that were printed that day. These sketches were obtained in investigating the eligibility of the contestants, no story being printed in the school teachers' competition until it had been established beyond the peradventure of a doubt that the contestant was a school teacher, and no story in the other competition until it had been conclusively ascertained that the writer was an American, this division of the contest being restricted to Americans. Incidentally, it may be stated that the Herald received a number of letters from Europeans expressing regret that they were ineligible—so eager were amateur writers everywhere to avail themselves of the opportunity to get their work before the public.

Newspapers throughout the country soon after the competition was inaugurated took cognizance of the attention which it was attracting and of the value from a purely news standpoint of the various developments in it, and printed many columns of articles regarding it. The publication of a story from any particular community was treated as an important news item by the press of that community and attention was prominently called to the matter. Frequently there would be keen rivalry between neighboring communities which were represented in the contest, and the newspapers did yeoman service in trying to carry their favorites to victory, some of them even publishing editorial appeals to local pride.

Shortly after the preliminary announcement made by the Herald the manuscripts began to flow in. Long before January 3, when the lists were opened by the publication of the four initial stories, an aggregate of several hundred stories of both classes had been received in the office and had been placed in the hands of the committee appointed to select the contestants for the fray. The best of the manuscripts went through two readings. First the wheat was separated from the chaff. Next the wheat was sifted for the purpose of securing the more promising grains. This final test was based on the opinion of the majority of the committee as to which grains would prove most appetizing to the general public, and therefore most likely to enlist its interest in the contest.

Of course there were heartburnings and bickerings. It would have been a delightful outcome of the experiment if all the five thousand competitors could have been gratified by the selections made by the committee. That under human conditions was impossible. Perhaps it was even impossible that the final selections should be ideally perfect. Judges themselves are human, and therefore fallible. A unanimous decision in the case of any manuscript was rarely reached. One reader might have a special preference for this, another for that contribution. The final selection could only be the result of mutual compromise. But it should be evident that such a compromise is a nearer approach to exact justice than the triumph of any individual over the opposition of the majority. Legal as well as lay tribunals have found by long experience that compromise is the only human means of attaining approximate certainty in cases of this sort.

Now, if human tribunals are at the best fallible, what shall be said of the fallibility of authors themselves? "We brew and we like our own tap, amen," says Thackeray. Goethe in his youth went through a notable experience. In his school days, he tells us, he frankly thought that his own essays were the best. He noticed, however, that each of his fellow students thought the same of his own. Somebody, say all but one, must be mistaken. He took the lesson to heart. Was he, too, one of the self-deceived?

It was this self-criticism and self-analysis, this eagerness to look at himself from the outside and through the eyes of outsiders, that eventually won for him the splendid serenity in which he worked out his masterpieces. The time came when nobody, including himself, could doubt that in the more important competitions in the larger world he was indeed supreme. Is there not here a lesson for all beginners in literature?

The manuscripts presented a variegated appearance. It had been stipulated in the published conditions of the contest that all contributions should be typewritten. Disregard of this condition was considered a handicap against a manuscript, but not an absolute disqualification. Many of the competitors pleaded inability to secure competent typewriters in their particular localities. Others urged poverty as a reason why they could not employ outside services. Overstrictness might lose a valuable story. It was deemed best to follow a liberal policy. But, other things being equal, the preference was necessarily given to typewritten over handwritten contributions, even when the non-typists had gone to the trouble, as they frequently had, of writing their manuscripts in print-like characters. Some of the contributions, typewritten and otherwise, were beautifully illuminated after the manner of the medieval missals and were really remarkable works of art. These received their proper meed of unofficial admiration.

Again, one of the stipulations had been that no contribution should exceed 2,500 words. Once more a liberal policy was allowed to prevail. And once more the liberality had its necessary boundaries. An excess over the authorized limit of 2,500 words was considered a handicap, but not an absolute disqualification when such excess was not over-excessive. It was impossible, of course, to stretch this liberality too far. In some cases the manuscripts could not even be considered. Not only would over-liberality be an injustice to authors who had complied with the exact conditions of the contest, but it would interfere with the proposed mechanical arrangement of publishing two stories on one page.

Another difficulty that faced the committee was the enormous number of manuscripts received. There were 4,878 in all, divided as follows:—School teachers, 847; amateurs and other writers, 4,031. They came from all parts of the country and of the world at large. The contributions increased in volume as the competition advanced.

On the very last day appointed for the receipt of manuscripts (Monday, June 7) nearly four hundred arrived. They began coming in early in the morning with the first mail and the first express deliveries. They rolled along in a steady stream until midnight, and not a few slopped over into the morning and the evening of June 8 and came dribbling in all through the week. Every method of conveyance was utilized on this last day. Besides the ordinary express and the ordinary mail many manuscripts arrived by special delivery; others were handed in personally by the authors or their representatives; others, again, were forwarded through district messengers. The glut for the moment was appalling. But many hands and many heads soon brought order out of chaos, and the entire number were tabulated, classified, read and reread in time for the final selections.

In order to reach this result, however, it was absolutely necessary to stick to the letter of the conditions. It had been announced that no manuscript received after six o'clock on June 7 would be considered. That rule had to be enforced.

Simultaneously the department of the Herald where the votes were received and counted was threatened with temporary submersion. Ballots arrived in letters by post, in parcels by hand, in packages by express. Here again fresh relays of recruits established and maintained order. These ballots covered both the awards of weekly prizes now concluded and the grand prizes to be awarded after all the victors in the separate duels were crowned, as they have now been crowned.

Of the 104 participants the majority were women—seventy-seven amazons and twenty-seven knights bore the brunt of the fray. It was only natural that a large majority of these came from the Atlantic and Middle States. Inevitably it was this region that captured the largest number of prizes. But the Far West and Pacific Coast States also had answered in no mean numbers to the trumpet calls of the Herald. This is shown in the list of competitors selected. Jamestown, N. D.; Portland, Baker City and Oregon City, in Oregon; Tucumcari, N. M.; Los Angeles and Palo Alto, Cal.; Butte, Mont., and other outposts in the Far West furnished competitors to one or the other of the contests, together with more inland cities like Denver, Col.; Chicago, Ill., and Alexandria, Minn.

One of the surprises of the contest might be called the Kelly sisters' episode. On May 9 there was published in the Amateur and Other American Writers' Contest a story called "The Mystery Lady," by Maryel Vance Abbott, of Oregon City, Ore. Investigation proved that Maryel Vance Abbott was a pseudonym used by Miss Elmina Kelly, a typewriter in Oregon City. The fact was duly announced to Herald readers. On May 23 there came out in the school teachers' contest a story called "The Boiling Point," which was frankly signed Miss Elizabeth Kelly. Similar investigation proved that she was a sister of Miss Elmina Kelly and a school teacher in Oregon City. Hard upon this discovery the committee learned that a story which was published in the school teachers' contest on May 30, "Her Brave Buckayro," was written by still another sister, Miss May Kelly, of Portland, Ore., a teacher in the first grade in a school situated in the foreign quarter in that city. Thus this remarkably talented family had produced three successful candidates, whose work had been selected for the final competition by the committee on short stories. No one could have been more surprised than the committee themselves at the outcome of their decisions.

There were some less pleasant incidents. A few would be contributors were detected in plagiarisms. Stories translated from the French, and badly translated at that, were traced to their origin and summarily rejected. Worse remains behind. Some of the fraudulent competitors actually pilfered old magazines for stories, which they submitted for examination. One of these people had been so awkward of choice as to fall upon a story by Nathaniel Hawthorne, which had first appeared anonymously in a magazine and was later included in his "Twice Told Tales." Immediate detection followed and all the stories submitted by this "author," every one of which had excited suspicion by reason of their old fashioned style, were promptly returned with a justifiable rebuke.

And as all sections were represented, so also were all ages and conditions of life. There were sexagenarians at one end, and, as an extreme instance, on the other there were two girls of seventeen, who furnished stories that were examples of astonishing precocity. There were a few professional writers, but the vast majority, including, of course, the school teachers, were engaged in earning their livelihoods in various avocations not directly or even indirectly connected with literature. There were lawyers, doctors, typewriters, clerks, salesmen and saleswomen. Many of these have never before attempted fiction. One and all are to be congratulated on the success of their endeavors. If a classification could be made of all the 4,878 writers who sent in manuscripts for examination it would be found that nearly every field of human activity had been covered, so far reaching and so broadly inclusive was the interest aroused by the competition.

Following the publication of the final instalment of stories in the competition the Herald was overwhelmed with requests that the stories be gathered together and republished in book form, and also that another contest be started as speedily as possible.

THE YOUNGER SET

Author of
"The Fighting Chance."

Supper and then the Woodland cotillon was the programme, and almost all the tables were filled before Selwyn had an opportunity to collect Nina and Austin and capture Eileen from a very very cheeked and indignant boy who had quite lost his head and heart and appeared to be on the verge of a headlong declaration.

"It's only Percy Draymore's kid brother," she explained, passing her arm through his with a little sigh of satisfaction. "Oh, here come Nina and Austin. How pretty the tables look all lighted up among the trees! And such an uproar!" as they came into the jolly tumult and passed in among a labyrinth of tables, greeted laughingly from every side.

Under a vigorous young oak tree thickly festooned with lanterns Austin found an unoccupied table. There were a great deal of racket and laughter from the groups surrounding them, but this seemed to be the only available spot; besides, Austin was hungry, and he said so.

Nina, with Selwyn on her left, looked around for Gerald and Lansing. When the latter came sauntering up Austin questioned him, but he replied carelessly that Gerald had gone to join some people whom he, Lansing, did not know very well.

"Why, there he is now!" exclaimed Eileen, catching sight of her brother seated among a very noisy group on the outer edge of the illuminated zone. "Who are those people, Nina? Oh, Rosamund Fane is there, too; and—and"—

She ceased speaking so abruptly that Selwyn turned around, and Nina bit her lip in vexation and glanced at her husband, for among the overanimated and almost boisterous group which was attracting the attention of everybody in the vicinity sat Mrs. Jack Ruthven. And Selwyn saw her.

For a moment he looked at her—looked at Gerald beside her, and Neergard on the other side, and Rosamund opposite, and at the others whom he had never before seen. Then quietly, but with heightened color, he turned his attention to the glass which the servant had just filled for him and, resting his hand on the stem, stared at the bubbles crowding upward through it to the foamy brim.

Nina and Boots had begun ostentatiously an exceedingly animated conversation, and they became almost aggressive, appealing to Austin, who sat back with a frown on his heavy face, and to Eileen, who was sipping her mineral water and staring thoughtfully at a big, round, orange tinted lantern which hung like the harvest moon behind Gerald, throwing his curly head into silhouette.

Stared at the bubbles.

What conversation there was to carry, Boots and Nina carried. Austin silently satisfied his hunger, eating and drinking with a sullen determination to make no pretense of ignoring a situation that plainly angered him deeply. And from minute to minute he raised his head to glare across at Gerald, who evidently was unconscious of the presence of his own party.

When Nina spoke to Eileen, the girl answered briefly, but with perfect composure. Selwyn, too, added a quiet word at intervals, speaking in a voice that sounded a little tired and strained.

It was that note of fatigue in his voice which aroused Eileen to effort—the instinctive move to protect, to sustain him. Conscious of Austin's suppressed but increasing anger at her brother, amazed and distressed at what Gerald had done—for the boy's very presence there with the set of whom they disapproved was an affront to them all—she was still more sensitive to Selwyn's voice, and in her heart she responded passionately.

Nina looked up, surprised at the sudden transformation in the girl, who had turned on Boots with a sudden flow of spirits and the gayest of challenges, and their laughter and badinage became so genuine and so persistent that, combining with Nina, they fairly swept Austin from his surly abstraction into their toils, and Selwyn's subdued laugh, if forced, sounded pleasant now, and his drawn face seemed to relax a little for the time being.

Once she turned, under cover of the general conversation which she had set going, and looked straight into Selwyn's eyes, flashing to him a message of purest loyalty, and his silent gaze in response sent the color flying to her cheeks.

It was all very well for awhile, a brave, sweet effort, but ears could not remain deaf to the increasing noise and laughter, to familiar voices, half caught phrases, indiscreet even in the fragments understood. Besides, Gerald had seen them, and the boy's face had become almost ghastly.

Alixe, unusually flushed, was conducting herself without restraint. Neergard's snickering laugh grew more significant and persistent. Even Rosamund spoke too loudly at moments, and once she looked around at Nina and Selwyn while her pretty, accentless laughter, rippling with its undertone of malice, became more frequent in the increasing tumult.

There was no use in making a pretense of further gayety. Austin had begun to scowl again. Nina, with one shocked glance at Alixe, leaned over toward her brother:

"Don't go. I care for you too much to ask it."

"It is incredible!" she murmured. "She must be perfectly mad to make such an exhibition of herself. Can't anybody stop her? Can't anybody send her home?"

Austin said sullenly, but distinctly: "The thing for us to do is to get out. Nina, if you are ready"—

"But—but what about Gerald?" faltered Eileen, turning piteously to Selwyn. "We can't leave him—there!"

The man straightened up and turned his drawn face toward her:

"Do you wish me to get him?"

"Y-you can't do that, can you?"

"Yes, I can, if you wish it. Do you think there is anything in the world I can't do, if you wish it?"

As he rose she laid her hand on his arm.

"I—I don't ask it"— she began.

"You do not have to ask it," he said, with a smile almost genuine. "Austin, I'm going to get Gerald, and Nina will explain to you that he's to be left to me if any sermon is required. I'll go back with him in the motor boat. Boots, you'll drive home in my place."

As he turned, still smiling and self possessed, Eileen whispered rapidly: "Don't go. I care for you too much to ask it."

He said under his breath, "Dearest, you cannot understand."

"Yes, I do! Don't go. Philip, don't go near her."

"I must."

"If you do—if you go—h-how can you c-care for me as you say you do—when I ask you not to—when I cannot endure to"—

She turned swiftly and stared across at Alixe, and Alixe, unsteady in the flushed brilliancy of her youthful beauty, half rose in her seat and stared back.

Instinctively the young girl's hand tightened on Selwyn's arm. "She—she is beautiful," she faltered, but he turned and led her from the table, following Austin, his sister and Lansing, and she clung to him almost convulsively when he halted on the edge of the lawn.

"I must go back," he whispered; "dearest, dearest, I must."

"T-to Gerald or her?"

But he only muttered: "They don't know what they're doing. Let me go, Eileen"—gently detaching her fingers, which left her hands lying in both of his.

She said, looking up at him: "If you go—if you go—whatever time you return—no matter what hour—knock at my door. Do you promise? I shall be awake. Do you promise?"

"Yes," he said, with a trace of impatience, the only hint of his anger at the prospect of the duty before him.

So she went away with Nina and Austin and Boots, and Selwyn turned back, sauntering quietly toward the table where already the occupants had apparently forgotten him and the episode in the riotous gayety increasing with the accession of half a dozen more men.

When Selwyn approached, Neergard saw him first, stared at him and snickered, but he greeted everybody with smiling composure, nodding to those he knew, a trifle more formally to Mrs. Ruthven, and, coolly pulling up a chair, seated himself beside Gerald.

"Boots has driven home with the others," he said in a low voice. "I'm going back in the motor boat with you. Don't worry about Austin. Are you ready?"

The boy had evidently let the wine alone or else fright had sobered him, for he looked terribly white and tired. "Yes," he said, "I'll go when you wish. I suppose they'll never forgive me for this. Come on."

"One moment, then," nodded Selwyn. "I want to speak to Mrs. Ruthven." And, quietly turning to Alixe and dropping his voice to a tone too low for Neergard to hear, for he was plainly attempting to listen:

"You are making a mistake. Do you understand? Whoever is your hostess, wherever you are staying, find her and go there before it is too late."

She inclined her pretty head thoughtfully, eyes on the wineglass which she was turning round and round between her slender fingers. "What do you mean by 'too late?'" she asked. "Don't you know that everything is too late for me now?"

"What do you mean, Alixe?" he returned, watching her intently.

"What I say. I have not seen Jack Ruthven for two months. Do you know what that means? I have not heard from him for two months. Do you know what that means? No? Well, I'll tell you, Philip. It means that when I do hear from him it will be through his attorneys."

He turned slightly paler. "Why?"

"Divorce," she said, with a reckless little laugh, "and the end of things for me."

"On what grounds?" he demanded doggedly. "Does he threaten you?"

She made no movement or reply, reclining there, one hand on her wineglass, the smile still curving her lips. And he repeated his question in a low, distinct voice, too low for Neergard to hear, and he was still listening.

"Grounds? Oh, he thinks I've misbehaved with—never mind who. It is not true, but he cares nothing about that either. You see," and she bent nearer confidentially, with a mysterious little nod of her pretty head—"you see, Jack Ruthven is a little insane. You are surprised? Pooh! I've suspected it for months."

He stared at her. Then, "Where are you stopping?"

"Aboard the Niobrara."

"Is Mrs. Fane a guest there too?"

He spoke loud enough for Rosamund to hear, and she answered for herself, with a smile at him brimful of malice.

"Delighted to have you come aboard, Captain Selwyn. Is that what you are asking permission to do?"

"Thanks," he returned dryly, and to Alixe, "If you are ready, Gerald and I will take you over to the Niobrara in the motor boat."

"Oh, no, you won't!" broke in Neergard, with a sneer. "You'll mind your own business, my intrusive friend, and I'll take care of my guests without your assistance."

Selwyn appeared not to hear him. "Come on, Gerald," he said pleasantly; "Mrs. Ruthven is going over to the Niobrara"—

"For God's sake," whispered Gerald, white as a sheet, "don't force me into trouble with Neergard."

Selwyn turned on him an astonished gaze. "Are you afraid of that whelp?"

"Yes," muttered the boy. "I—I'll explain later, but don't force things now, I beg you."

Mrs. Ruthven coolly leaned over and spoke to Gerald in a low voice; then to Selwyn she said, with a smile: "Rosamund and I are going to Brookminster anyway, so you and Gerald need not wait. And thank you for coming over. It was rather nice of you"—she glanced insolently at Neergard—"considering the crowd we're with. Good night, Captain Selwyn. Good night, Gerald. So very jolly to have seen you again!" And under her breath to Selwyn: "You need not worry. I am going in a moment. Goodby, and—thank you, Phil. It is good to see somebody of one's own caste again."

A few moments later Selwyn and Gerald in their oilskins were dashing eastward along the coast in the swiftest motor boat south of the Narrows.

The boy seemed deathly tired as they crossed the dim lawn at Silverside. Once on the veranda steps he stumbled, and Selwyn's arm sustained him, but the older man forbore to question him, and Gerald, tight lipped and haggard, offered no confidence until at the door of his bedroom he turned and laid an unsteady hand on Selwyn's shoulder and said: "I am in a very bad fix. I want to talk with you tomorrow. May I?"

"You know you may, Gerald. I am always ready to stand your friend."

At the end of the corridor Selwyn halted before Eileen's room. A light came through the transom. He waited a moment, then knocked very softly.

"Is it you?" she asked in a low voice.

"Yes. I didn't wake you, did I?"

"No. Is Gerald here?"

"Yes; in his own room. Did you wish to speak to me about anything?"

"Yes."

He heard her coming to the door. It opened a very little. "Good night," she whispered, stretching toward him her hand. "That was all I wanted—to—to touch you before I closed my eyes tonight."

He bent and looked at the hand lying within his own—the little hand with its fresh, fragrant palm upturned and the white fingers relaxed, drooping inward above it—at the delicate bluish vein in the smooth wrist.

Then he released the hand, untouched by his lips, and she withdrew it and closed the door, and he heard her laugh softly and lean against it, whispering:

"Now that I am safely locked in I merely wish to say that in the old days a lady's hand was sometimes kissed. Oh, but you are too late, my poor friend! I can't come out, and I wouldn't if I could—not after what I dared to say to you."

And, too low for him to hear even the faintest breathing whisper of her voice: "Good night. I love you with all my heart, with all my heart, in my own fashion."

• • • • • • •

He had been asleep an hour, perhaps more, when something awakened him and he found himself sitting bolt upright in bed, dawn already whitening his windows.

Somebody was knocking. He swung out of bed, stepped into his bath slippers and, passing swiftly to the door, opened it. Gerald stood there, fully dressed.

"I'm going to town on the early train," began the boy. "I thought I'd tell you."

The dawn was no paler than the boy's face, no more desolate. Trouble was his, the same old trouble that has dogged the trail of folly since time began, and Selwyn knew it and waited.

At last the boy broke out: "This is a cowardly trick, this slinking in to you with all my troubles after what you've done for me, after the rotten way I've treated you. Philip, I can't tell you; I simply cannot. It's so contemptible, and you warned me, and I owe you already so much."

"You owe me a little money," observed Selwyn, with a careless smile, "and you've a lifetime to pay it in. What is the trouble now? Do you need more? I haven't an awful lot, old fellow, worse luck, but what I have is at your call, as you know perfectly well. Is that all that is worrying you?"

"No, not all. I—Neergard has lent me money—done things—placed me under obligations. I liked him, you know. I trusted him. People he desired to know I made him known to. He was a—a trifle peremptory at times, as though my obligations to him left me no choice but to take him to such people as he desired to meet. We—we had trouble recently."

"What sort?"

"Personal. I felt—began to feel—the pressure on me. There was at moments something almost of menace in his requests and suggestions, an importunity I did not exactly understand. And then he said something to me."

"Go on. What?"

"He'd been hinting at it before, and even when I found him jolliest and most amusing and companionable I never thought of him as a—a social possibility—I mean among those who realy count—like my own people."

"Yes, my boy, I see. Go on. When did he ask to be presented to your sister?"

"W-who told you that?" asked the boy, with an angry flush.

"You did—almost. You were going to anyway. So that was it, was it? That was when you realized a few things—understood one or two things, was it not? And how did you reply? Arrogantly, I suppose."

"Yes."

"With—a—some little show of—a—contempt?"

"Yes, I suppose so."

"Exactly. And Neergard was put out slightly?"

"Yes," said the boy, losing some of his color. "I—a moment afterward I was sorry I had spoken so plainly, but I need not have been. He was very ugly about it."

"Threats of calling loans?" asked Selwyn, smiling.

"Hints; not exactly threats. I was in a bad way too." The boy winced and swallowed hard; then, with sudden white desperation stamped on his drawn face, he added: "Oh, Philip, it—it is disgraceful enough, but how am I going to tell you the rest? How can I speak of this matter to you?"

"What matter?"

"A-about—about Mrs. Ruthven."

"What matter?" repeated Selwyn. His voice rang a little, but the color had fled from his face.

"She was—Jack Ruthven charged her with—and me—charged me with"—

"You!"

"Yes."

"Well, it was a lie, wasn't it?" Selwyn's ashy lips scarcely moved, but his eyes were narrowing to a glimmer. "It was a lie, wasn't it?" he repeated.

"Yes, a lie. I'd say it, anyway, you understand, but it really was a lie."

Selwyn quietly leaned back in his chair. A little color returned to his cheeks.

"All right, old fellow"—his voice scarcely quivered—"all right. Go on. I knew, of course, that Ruthven lied, but it was part of the story to hear you say so. Go on. What did Ruthven do?"

"There has been a separation," said the boy in a low voice. "He behaved like a dirty cad. She had no resources, no means of support." He hesitated, moistening his dry lips with his tongue. "Mrs. Ruthven has been very, very kind to me. I was—I am fond of her. Oh, I know well enough I never had any business to meet her. I behaved abominably toward you and the family. But it was done. I knew her and liked her tremendously. She was the only one who was decent to me, who tried to keep me from acting like a fool about cards."

"Did she try?"

"Yes—indeed, yes! And, Phil, she—I don't know how to say it—but she—when she spoke of—of you—begged me to try to be like you. And it is a lie what people say about her—what gossip says. I know. I have known her so well—and—I was like other men—charmed and fascinated by her, but the women of that set are a pack of cats and the men—well, none of them ever ventured to say anything to me! And that is all, Philip. I was horribly in debt to Neergard. Then Ruthven turned on me—and on her, and I borrowed more from Neergard and went to her bank and deposited it to the credit of her account, but she doesn't know it was from me. She supposes Jack Ruthven did it out of ordinary decency, for she said so to me. And that is how matters stand. Neergard is ugly and grows more threatening about those loans, and I haven't any money, and Mrs. Ruthven will require more very soon."

POWER AND PRIVILEGE

Between the privilege conferred by time and by the acquiescence of the people, and the privilege wrenched from the people and self-appropriated, in Canada there is little difference. The one set represent the robber-barons of old and the beer-barons of a later age. The others represent the money-barons of the immediate past or of the prevailing present. It is all the same. Both seek to escape the burden of that taxation which is laid upon a nation chiefly through the wars and turmoils waged in their interests. So long as money is the sole medium of exchange, so long will those without money fall short of all that money can buy. Worst of all, however, is the usurious return demanded by Money, which is ever on the watch to secure huge bargains, and bargains mean sacrifices. The sacrifices are furnished by those who toil and moil and work and slave out of all proportion to the work done by their money-masters. Sometimes, it is true, bad management or speculative risk will lose a man his money. But that is not the true function of money. It is usually the last to lose. All else must go first, and that, too, notwithstanding the fact that efforts are made, from time to time, to patch up a system of statutes that will protect the wage-earners and the mass of the people.

Our courts are supposed to administer justice, whereas it is largely law they administer. In civil matters the expense leaves law the luxury of the rich. In criminal law "intent is the essence of crime," and so long as intent and not motive remains the essence of crime, so long will the stock-gambler escape and the bread-taker get six months for trying to stave off starvation. Natural justice is no nearer being administered by the courts now than at any time and until all the circumstances, conditions, facts, motives, intentions, etc., are made use of to further the ends of real justice, so long will juries tend to give their verdicts in defiance of judges learned in the law, and so long will moonlighters hang crime upon a tree and riddle it with bullets. It was the absurdity of the courts that precipitated the French as all other, revolutions. Revolutions are lynchings on a large scale, and the time is drawing near for another.

WHY NOT

Port Hope Times.

Another election trial has come and gone with all its disgusting attendant perjury, trickery and deceit. Once more has the reading public been treated to a mass of typical election trial evidence, and the result cannot but be unedifying to any sane man. In certain circles the impression has been founded that everything is fair in politics—even down to the "sell-out" man who works for one man and gives his knowledge to the other candidate. Even that is "fair." The conclusion must be reached that sooner or later the man will sell his vote, and the man who buys should go to jail. One such sentence would work wonders in purifying the political air in Canada. Every election time every platform in the Dominion is mounted by a lusty lunged candidate who denounces "graft" "ballot stuffing" and all the other arts of the campaign heeler. After the elections dozens of saw-offs are fixed up, and yet the work goes merrily along. But let one or two men in every crooked election go down for a few months to the place where "big rocks are made into little ones" and the trouble would soon vanish.

The crux of the matter seems to lie in the fact that no one considers bribery in elections a crime, it is no crime to buy a vote, no crime to sell one; no crime to steal a seat. Even no crime to put a dollar bill under a pasteboard box and let the other fellow find it. This one example shows how the public mind is corrupted—ten to one every man who read that in the daily papers only laughed.

Why should the paper box be used? Why not hand out the money and do away with the box fraud? In any case a man who would resort to such a trick would not hesitate to color his evidence.

Put the briber and seller in jail. If only as an experiment.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Evidence in the Peterborough election trial makes the question "where did the money come from?" more of a mystery than ever.—Orillia Packet.

The procedure of saying when the councillors are in committee and when in council is very like that exercised by the now-you-see-it-now-you-don't pea-pod man at the sideshow. It is the "light of a benighted age," so to speak. We still have some queer survivals of custom.

"The power of the immediate future is waterpower. The trust of the immediate future is the power trust, if nation, state or citizen fail to do their utmost. In some regions this trust is already firmly intrenched. In others it is in the making. In every region it is spreading, strengthening, acquiring, where men need power to work for them and water runs down hill. To say there are no combinations to control water-powers, is to be of them, or to be misinformed." This trenchant paragraph, by Overton W. Price, in the Independent Magazine, is calculated to emphasize the prudence and far-reaching importance of the Ontario hydro-electric policy, which has been so insidiously and sedulously attacked and obstructed in so many ways.—Farmers' Advocate.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

OF INTEREST

A Book of a Week

London, Oct. 5.—Decidedly the "book of the week" has been "My Recollections," by the Countess of Cardigan. A large edition was printed, but it was exhausted in a single day, and extensive search among the booksellers of London has failed to bring to light a single unsold copy.

Lady Cardigan, who is not long past the three score and ten years of the prophet, has had probably a unique experience of Victorian society. She still rejoices in a remarkable memory, and as she was a diligent gossip in her younger days, she has served up for her readers an amount of tittle-tattle which has possibly not been published within the covers of a book since Brantome wrote his famous "Vie des Dames Galantes."

All the reviews published on the morning "My Recollections" was sent out to the booksellers contained expurgations that many of the stories told by the authoress were not of a nature to bear reproduction. Others have the air of being adaptations of familiar smoking room stories. To some of these the authoress has not hesitated to affix names.

Lady Cardigan declares that the Court of King Edward is "broader-minded" now than it has been for years, and "the King does not exhibit those sometimes rather unkind and inconsistent peculiarities which were shown by his mother." She thinks that Her Majesty's dislike of widows marrying again was very remarkable, "considering that she was the offspring of a happy second marriage." She goes on to say:

"The late Queen was most kind to me when I was young, but I fear the way in which I defied convention, before I married Lord Cardigan, did not prepossess her favorably to me, and my second marriage—with a Portuguese, Don Antonio Manuelo, Count de Lancastre, cousin of the Marquis de Soveral—greatly displeased her, as by it I took the title of Lancastre, which she was so fond of using when she travelled incognito."

Various other causes for Lady Cardigan's unpopularity with Queen Victoria have been assigned. She possessed that fascination for the other sex which is some women's chief ambition. She had a goodly list of suitors, including a Russian prince and two dukes. Curiously enough nearly all of them were widowers. Her most distinguished suitor was the Count de Montemolin, eldest son of the first Don Carlos who was willing to renounce his chances of a throne for her. The writer says she refused him, but gossip says not unkindly. She declares that Disraeli proposed to her and that she rejected his advances because his breath was bad. Her account of this suit is as follows:

"My hunting recollections would not be complete without including among them the occasion, in '73, when I went to a meet at Belvoir, who won the Bahadon Coplow stakes at Croxton Park, and that morning I was much exercised in my mind about a proposal of marriage I had just received from Disraeli.

"He had one drawback as far as I was concerned—and that was his breath—the ill-odor of politics, perhaps! In ancient Rome a wife could divorce her husband if his breath were unpleasant, and had Dizzy lived in those days his wife would have been able to divorce him without any difficulty.

"I lunched with the royal party at Belvoir Castle, and as I rode home afterward I felt well pleased that I had decided not to become the wife of a politician."

A grim story is told of the death of Lady Ward, who as Constance Surgh, has been a famous beauty.

"On the evening of the day before her burial Lord Colville came to see Lord Ward. They talked for some time, and then the widower turned to his friend.

"Colville, you admired my wife?"

"Yes," replied Lord Colville. "I did."

"Well, come and look your last on her," said Lord Ward, and lighting a candle he led the way upstairs.

The room was full of shadows, and the flickering light fell on the lovely face of the dead woman; Silently Lord Colville stood by her, and his heart ached when he thought of her fate. Ward was watching him attentively.

"Still admiring my wife? Well, she was a pretty woman—but you'd never credit she had such bad teeth." He put down the candle on a table as he spoke and raised his wife's head from the pillow.

With cold deliberation he wrenched the jaws apart. "I always told you she had bad teeth," he repeated. "Look here man." But Lord Colville had hurriedly left the room.

He told me afterwards it was the most ghastly sight he had ever seen.

In a lighter vein is a story of a grandfather of the present Duke of Westminster, who, notwithstanding his great wealth, had the reputation of being rather mean.

A short story was told about his once looking at a pair of trousers his valet was wearing, and saying: "Those are very good trousers. Did I give them to you?" "Yes, my Lord." "Well, here's a shilling for you," said the stingy nobleman. "I'll have them back again."

Lady Cardigan tells a delightful anecdote of her uncle, Admiral Rous, the famous racing man;—

Mrs. Rous was very dictatorial, and I remember one day after her death calling to inquire how my uncle was. "Indeed, my lady," said the servant, "I may say the Admiral is a deal better since Mrs. Rous' death." I believe the same answer was given to all callers.

Lord de Ros was a great gambler, who lived for a long time under the suspicion of cheating at cards, and was found out eventually. Society cut him, and when he died soon afterward the following epitaph was suggested:

Here lies
Lord de Ros,
waiting for the last trump.

BRITAIN IN FERMENT OVER THE BUDGET

Mr. Asquith, Lord Rosebery, the Earl of Cawdor Are in Consultation With the King and Are Probably Trying to Avert a Crisis.

London, Oct. 11.—The past week has been one of great political excitement, culminating in Prime Minister Asquith's sudden visit to the King and the announcement that the House of Commons would adjourn for a week from Saturday.

There is no longer any seriousness in the attempts to keep up the pretence that the visits of Lord Rosebery, the Earl of Cawdor and Mr. Asquith to Balmoral were not connected with the political crisis. The official and reasonable explanation of the week's adjournment is that fully a week is required for drafting alterations to the budget, but there is no doubt that these visits to the King and the week's adjournment have one object, that of affording an opportunity to ascertain whether the constitutional crisis cannot be averted.

It is not suggested that the King is giving the weight of his personal aid to either side, but rather that he is acting in home politics, as he has so consistently done in international politics, in his favorite role of peacemaker. Meanwhile, nothing is said or done to throw the slightest light on the situation. What finally will be the action of the Lords and the Government remains a mystery.

Mr. Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, declares that the Lords must pass the budget as it stands, but despite assurances such as this from responsive Ministers, there is a strong tendency to revert to the first idea that a general election will come in November. It seems almost impossible that the point of dissolution can be reached in such a short time, but The Spectator fears it. The Outlook warns the Unionists against a sudden dissolution. The Saturday Review admits that it appears absurd, but says if the Government thinks the psychological moment has come, then dissolution will occur in November.

Speculation on these points and interest in the constitutional crisis have put the budget itself, free trade, tariff reform and other planks in both political platforms into the background, but the Unionists evidently intend to play unemployment, which is expected to be greater than ever during the coming winter, as their chief card.

Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a speech at Newcastle Saturday afternoon, made a vigorous defence of the budget and a bitter attack on the House of Lords. He declared that the bill was now practically in the form in which it was to become an act of Parliament. He said that instead of the measure being an attack on industry and property it was a fact that since its introduction in the House of Commons trade and industry had increased.

The only stock which had gone down since the introduction of the bill, said the Chancellor, was that in dukes, in which there had been a great slump. A fully equipped duke cost as much to keep up as a couple of Dreadnoughts. So long as dukes were content to be mere idols and preserve that kind of stately silence which became their rank and intelligence, said the Chancellor, all went well. When the burget came, however, they stepped down from their perches because the measure knocked a little gilt off their stage coaches.

What the Lords would do with the budget, declared the Chancellor, concerned themselves more than it did the Government. The more irresponsible and featherheaded among them wanted it thrown out. What the others would do depended in the first place on reports from the country.

The Chancellor went on dramatically: "What our fathers obtained through centuries of struggle, strife and bloodshed we will not lightly give up. The constitution is to be torn to pieces. Let them realize what they are doing. They are forcing a revolution.

"The Lords may declare a revolution," said the Chancellor, "but it is the people who will direct it. Issues will be raised that they little dream of."

The Chancellor concluded by declaring that the Government was going to have all the taxes in the budget or none.

Lloyd-George Attacked.

Newcastle, Eng., Oct. 11.—David Lloyd-George, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, received a popular welcome Saturday afternoon at the palace theatre here, where he gave to an audience of 4,000 what he called a "plain talk on the subject of a budget." "We are going to send that bill up to the House of Lords and get all the taxes or none," said the Chancellor.

When Lloyd-George was leaving the theatre a crowd of suffragettes made a dash toward his car. Lady Constance Lytton, who was armed with a hatchet, Mrs. H. N. Brailsford and Miss Davison were arrested.

Earlier in the day, four other sympathizers with the suffragettes were sentenced to fourteen days at hard labor for indulging in a window smashing campaign at the local Liberal club.

Brockville, Oct. 11.—News has been received here of the narrow escape from drowning in Mud Lake, at Newboro, of three men, Bawden, Irving and Murray. Their boat sprung a leak a considerable distance from shore. Lyons swam to shore and his companions managed to cling to the half-submerged boat.

CODY FAILS TO FLY TO LONDON

Aldershot, Eng., Oct. 11.—Captain F. S. Cody, the American aeroplanist in the service of the British army, started on a flight to London at 7.24 o'clock Saturday morning. INTERNATIONALISM TRADES UNIONISM

New York, Oct. 11.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, landed Saturday from the steamer La Savoie from Europe.

He said that at the International Trades Union Conference in Berlin, to which he was a fraternal delegate, he had strongly favored the formation of an international trades union. "The question as given much consideration," Mr. Gompers added, "and was finally tabled and will be discussed at the next intereational conference in Budapest."

CONSTABLES SAVED MAN FROM DEATH

Kingston, Ont., Oct. 11.—Constables Harry Filson and Marshall Armstrong saved James Elliott, Elginburg, from drowning at midnight on Saturday.

Elliott was under the influence of liquor and fell into the slip at the foot of Queen street. He cried for help and the constables, who were a block away, heard and found Elliott almost exhausted. He will have to answer a charge of drunkenness in the Police Court.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Commissioner Harris Explains.

Ottawa, Oct. 11.—Mr. Harris, Canadian trade commissioner in Japan, who, it was stated some time ago, had written a Toronto merchant, warning him not to ship goods direct to Japanese merchants because they could not be trusted, says that his caution applied to one individual firm only, and not to Japanese business men.

Edmonton, Alta., Oct. 11.—Lying in a wagon, surrounded by a detachment of city and mounted police, and shackled to three convicts, whom he had helped to escape from prison at Fort Saskatchewan on Wednesday, Private Watters, R.N.W.M.P., was brought into the city and is now confined at the barracks.

All of this amount, with the exception of $163,000, will be expended in Siberia and on the Amur Railroad. The sum of $11,500,000 is allotted to the railroad line around Lake Baikal, and $12,500,000 to double track the Trans-Siberian.

Lucan, Ont., Oct. 11.—Mrs. Mary Culbert, aged 65 years, a life-long resident of this place, dropped dead while lighting a fire in the range. She is survived by her second husband and two daughters, Mrs. Alex. Leavitt of Walkerville and Mrs. George Lounds of Detroit.

DIES AS RESULT OF BROKEN-HEART

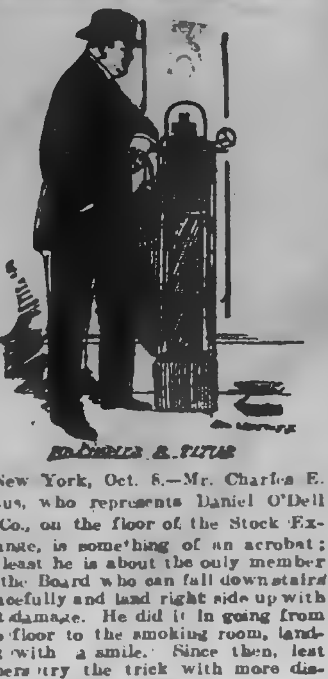
Chicago, Oct. 11.—Mrs. Agnes McCann, the 70-year-old mother of Police Inspector Edward McCann, who is under conviction of having accepted tribute from keepers of disorderly houses, died yesterday at her home in Lincoln, Ill. She is believed to have succumbed to a broken heart. She has always been proud of her boys, seven in number, of whom three are police officers, and was most proud of Edward when he was raised to the dignity of inspector. She never recovered his conviction.

MILLINER FOUND GUILTY OF MURDER

Gustrow, Germany, Oct. 11.—A verdict of guilty was Saturday handed down in the case of Auguste Zobel, a Berlin milliner, charged with the murder last March, of Friesia Barthold, a young opera singer. The motive of the crime was jealousy. The accused woman was sentenced to death.

She testified that a Berlin commercial traveler had cast her off and become engaged to Fraulein Barthold.

Although she pleaded guilty, Fraulein Zobel averred that she intended only to shoot the singer in the throat to ruin her voice, and that it was by accident that the bullet penetrated her left eye and killed her.



MR. CHARLES E. TITUS

New York, Oct. 8.—Mr. Charles E. Titus, who represents Daniel O'Dell & Co., on the floor of the Stock Exchange, is something of an acrobat; at least he is about the only member of the Board who can fall down stairs gracefully and land right side up without damage. He did it in going from the floor to the smoking room, landing with a smile. Since then, lest others try the trick with more disastrous results, a hand rail has been placed in position.

Mr. Titus has grown up in the street, coming down town as a clerk and gradually working his way up. He has been a member of the Exchange since 1900.

A BIG MISSION CAMPAIGN IN THE UNITED STATES

New York, Oct. 12.—Unique in the history of religious movements is the national missionary campaign which will be launched this week by the laymen's missionary movement, representing the laymen of all the Protestant churches in the United States.

In 75 principal cities, east and west, north and south, men's missionary conventions will be held, at which an aggregate attendance of more than 100,000 men is expected.

Ten thousand men are now serving on local committees in preparation for the meetings. President Taft heads the list of over 200 speakers, who will be heard throughout the winter. This list includes prominent public men, officers of army and navy, newspaper men, bankers, business and professional men, ministers, mission board secretaries and missionaries.

The campaign will open at Buffalo, N.Y., on Dec. 16. In November, the circuit will swing along the eastern coast and include Providence, Boston, Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia. It will swing as far west as Detroit in December. Three or four days will be spent in each city.

INFANTICIDE IS CHARGED

Girl is Suspected of Killing Her Two-Year Old Child

Bracebridge, Oct. 11.—Eva Suter, aged 21, of the Township of Draper, is arrested under suspicion of doing away with her child of about two years of age.

The girl left her home on September 20, after having had words with her father the night before, with a valise, and with the child in her arms. On passing a neighbor's a short distance away, she was alone. As nothing more was seen of the child, some of the neighbors insisted on an investigation.

County Constable Armstrong of Bracebridge questioned the girl, who at first refused to answer, but afterwards said the child was at the home of John Sherwood, Gravenhurst. Then she stated that her father had overtaken her on the road shortly after her leaving home, knocked her down and killed the child in her presence, and disposed of the body in a swamp on their own farm, and threatened to kill her if she divulged anything.

Armstrong took the girl out to the swamp on her father's farm, and, after getting the father, who protested his innocence, a search was instituted. The girl was the only one who seemed to know where to look, and the body was found buried under several inches of moss and mud, and ankle deep in water at the base of a turned up tree. A narrow piece of cotton was tied tightly around the neck.

An inquest will be opened Monday night.

THEFT CHARGE AGAINST MEN

Owen Sound, Oct. 11.—John Johns, assistant foreman at the C.P.R. steamship freight sheds, and two employes, George Christie and James Ferris, are under arrest, charged with theft from goods in transit. Stolen articles include lace worth several hundred dollars, ladies' gloves and shoes, soap, chocolate and creams and were found, it is stated, at Johns home. He comes of an old and respected family. The adjourned hearing takes place next Saturday.

MORE SCIENTISTS ARE EXPELLED

New York, Oct. 11.—Disclosure was made Saturday night that seven practitioners in the First Church of Christ, Scientists, in this city, have been forbidden by the board of directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientists, of Boston, the "Mother Church" of the Christian Scientists of the world, to continue practice, because of their adherence to the teachings of Mrs. Augustus E. Stetson, who was deposed. It was said with authority Saturday night that a majority of the twenty-six practitioners who have been in the First Church in this city will soon find themselves with the seven.

Gen. D'Amade has been retired from the French army for too freely discussing the Spanish trouble.

The wife of Major Moodie, of the N.W.M.P., is back in Ottawa after three years' absence at Fort Churchill.

W. S. Calvert, M.P., is the likely appointee to the vacancy on the National Transcontinental Railway Commission.

Andrew Carnegie has given $100,000 to McGill University for the general fund. This is half of the sum sought by the authorities.

Dr. Fred. A. Cook will come to Canada to tour several cities late this month. His first lecture will be delivered in Montreal on either the 13th or 19th.

It is said two or three British ship building firms may combine for a Canadian establishment. The Dominion Drydock & Shipbuilding Co., capitalization $1,000,000, is seeking incorporation.

William Mattery's dirigible balloon collapsed at a height of 100 feet at South Bend, Ind., yesterday. Both Mattery's wrists were fractured when he struck the ground. The machine, valued at $3,000 was destroyed.

E. S. Amery, of The London Times, while taking part in the paper chase given by the Winnipeg Hunt Club Saturday afternoon in honor of Earl Grey, fell from his horse and sustained a compound fracture of the ankle.

Henry Woodruff of St. David's was killed on the G.T.R. tracks at Stamford early yesterday morning. The body was terribly mangled. Deceased left his home Saturday and went to Niagara Falls. He left there that night, walking home on the tracks.

The horribly mangled remains of an unknown man, about 28 years of age, were found last night on the Grand Trunk tracks about a quarter of a mile east of the Hyde Park station. In the pockets were street car tickets from Toronto, London and New York.

R. L. BORDEN TO SPEAK AT HALIFAX

Montreal, Oct. 11.—R. L. Borden, M.P., left for Halifax yesterday, and will address a large meeting in Nova Scotia before the opening of Parliament. The Conservative leader repudiates the interview appearing not long since, in The Mail and Empire. He will announce the party's Dreadnought policy at the meeting in question.

Mr. Borden made a speech at the Lafontaine Club Saturday evening in which he said that steps were being taken to organize the Conservative party in all the provinces, as that party had never been organized before. The leader especially called upon the young men of Quebec to rally around the natural rulers of the country, who would put an end to the corruption that is being practiced by the Ministerial camp followers.

PARDONED CONVICT REMARRIES WIFE

Harrisburg, Ill., Oct. 11.—J. W. Neill, sentenced from Saline County to the penitentiary ten years ago to serve a sentence of 25 years for the murder of Cecil Woodworth, but who was pardoned a few days ago, was re-married here Saturday to his former wife, who had obtained a divorce after his conviction and married Augustus Gaylord. Gaylord died two years ago, leaving her free.

THE CZAR WILL AVOID ITALY

Rome, Oct. 11.—The Czar's visit to Italy has been abandoned, at least for the present, owing to the illness of the Czarina, which is due to nervous excitement and worry. Apart from every other consideration, the Czar cannot risk a hostile reception, which would affect the Czarina's health.

The above is the official explanation, but it is well-known that the visit would have been abandoned whether the Czarina was ill or well, because the Government, though willing to guard the Czar's life, knew that it would be impossible to exclude hostile demonstrations.

METHODISTS CELEBRATED

Ottawa, Ont., Oct. 11.—The eighty fifth anniversary of the foundation of the Methodist Missionary Society of Canada was celebrated last night in the Dominion Methodist Church.

Rev. Jas. Allen, secretary of home mission department, said that during the past decade, 375,000 foreigners had come into the country, of whom 75,000 are Protestants. Fifty thousand had located in Montreal, from 26,000 to 30,000 in Toronto, while in Winnipeg from one-third to one-fourth of population is made up of foreign elements.

Jerome Out of It.

New York, Oct. 11.—As had been predicted for several days, William Travers Jerome issued a statement through his campaign manager Saturday, formally withdrawing from the contest for re-election as district attorney as an Independent.

NO TYPHOID AT LINDSAY

Excellent Water Believed to be Largely Responsible for the Condition

Lindsay, Oct. 11.—While in past summers the hospital has had numerous typhoid patients, not a single sufferer from this disease from this town has been in the hospital this summer. This singular exemption, it is generally conceded, is due to the excellent state of the water supplied by the town.

CASES FROM COUNTRY.

There were five or six cases of typhoid all told in the Ross Hospital this past summer, but these were all from the surrounding country.

CAUSED BY BAD WATER.

Typhoid is, as a rule, caused by bad water and seldom comes from other causes. Any doctor will bear witness to this statement. Hence the natural deduction is that Lindsay has remarkably pure water.

OZONE VS. SAND FILTRATION.

With the old sand filtered water many cases of typhoid were in town. The first season of ozone purified water has passed without a single case of typhoid fever.

City Council Will Meet to Try and Settle that Question

The city council will meet to-night to talk about the isolation hospital situation. The aldermen hope to decide the matter one way or the other to-night, but it is likely there will be a great deal of discussion before the end comes. In the meantime the people are prepared for anything to happen.

CONSTABLE'S POSSE HAS A BRUSH WITH BURGLARS

Trio of Post Office Robbers Boldly Invade Small Villages Near Arnprior and When Pursued by Police Manage to Escape After a Sharp Fight.

Arnprior, Oct. 11.—The pickanock safeblowers have again evaded the clutches of the law by the use of their revolvers. This time it was the village constable of Galetta, a small village six miles from Arnprior, who, with three assistants, endeavored to capture the bandits. Since last Monday morning, when the safe was blown, the men have been hunted by posses of police in the Gatineau Hills. Last Wednesday one of the quartette was arrested at North Wakefield, up the Gatineau in Quebec, but the other three by ready use of their revolvers, got away into the bush.

They were seen by two boys on the following morning on the top of a hill, three miles from the scene of the fight.

On Saturday evening they put in an appearance at Quyon, having tramped almost entirely through the thickly wooded hills for thirty miles. It was thought that they might appear there, but no special constables had been placed on guard, when the burglars about six o'clock, there were many who were sure they were the much sought desperadoes, but none attempted their arrest. Instead, they facilitated their departure by giving all the information asked, and selling them supplies.

To the people they talked to, the men said they had been hunting and had lost their way. Only one of the men had a rifle, but this they explained by saying the other two had lost theirs in the bush.

They went boldly in to the village, purchased shaving soap, tobacco and other supplies at the stores, and then they went to Doyle's Hotel where all three had supper, and several drinks in the bar. Then they enquired how to get across the Ottawa river, and were directed to the ferry which goes from the Quebec to the Ontario side of the river.

They crossed over shortly after six o'clock to the landing, which is about four miles above Fitzroy Harbor, and there took the main road which leads to Galetta passing over a quarter of a mile back of the Village of Fitzroy Harbor. In the meantime Fitzroy Harbor had been notified by telephone, but no one from Quyon followed. J. D. Craig, a farmer, offered a ride to one man walking some distance from the other two, but was told that all three were together going to Arnprior. Craig's rig would not hold all, and so he drove on. At Fitzroy Harbor, Heman Kedy, hotelman, was notified by Craig and the operator of the ferry, and he passed the word on to Galetta.

Constable Johnson abolished his star and loaded his Winchester rifle and then swore in three villagers to help him. Two of these he armed with 38 calibre revolvers and the fourth with a rifle. The plan was for two to lie beside the road at one place, and the other two a couple of hundred feet away, thus getting the men between the two divisions. But while they were waiting, the constable got anxious for fear his two assistants, who were not with him, might get excited and fire on the first three men they saw approaching. He went back to make sure and was lying down in the grass when the trio arrived, walking on the opposite side of the road. As soon as they passed the constable quietly approached to within thirty feet — at least that is how Constable Johnson figures the distance.

"Halt, boys, hold up your hands," commanded the constable, as he raised his weapon. But two of the burglars blazed away with their revolvers, one firing one shot and the other two, and all three ran. The constable and his assistants used all their charges without effect. It was now a few minutes to 9 o'clock, and quite dark.

One man darted up a side road, another vanished, the constable did not know where, and the third continued along the road, through a garden to another street and along past the general store, where the usual Saturday night crowd were getting Sunday provisions. They heard the shots and knew who had been expected; they saw the fugitives with the constable after him, and then they suddenly had an irresistible impulse to see the inside of the store again.

Yesterday morning Wm. Key, night operator at the G.T.R. station found two empty and two full cartridges near the water tank. Apparently, Mr. Burglar reloaded his revolver and prepared to resist attack.

Constable Johnston remained around for the rest of the night and phoned Ottawa, and a squad of eight city and Dominion police arrived early yesterday morning. All day barns and outbuildings were searched in vain. Last night men were stationed along the railway and on roads leading to Arnprior, Pakenham and other villages. Men who saw the fugitives say they appeared all fagged out. Last night Dr. Groves of Carp telephoned that he had seen the trio.

CONVICTED OF MANSLAUGHTER

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 11.—The jury has returned a verdict of manslaughter against Capt. Ralph Pringle, well-known as a navigator of the great lakes, who was tried for the killing of George Birrell McKinnon in the "Hole in the Wall" saloon in St Clair last winter. The verdict carries a penalty of from 5 to 20 years in prison.

Pringle's plea was that McKinnon had invaded the sanctity of his home.

VOTE REGISTRATION

The registered vote is a floating vote, a vote that takes so little interest in the affairs of the country as to have to be jogged to the registry. The result is a mass of corruption at election times. While the extension of the franchise is a good thing where prized, it is worse than bad where not prized. It leads to corruption. It may be said that the registered voter is often an honest man. That is true. It is also said that the man with a stake in the country is, sometimes, just as purchaseable as anybody else. That is true also. It is also maintained that registration is not at fault, but the laws and law-enforcers, which pretend to govern elections. There is a large measure of truth in that also. But the fact remains that a floating vote is never, under any conditions, a desirable one or one that deserves recognition. The franchise is too loose. The registered vote should be cut off. Farmers have not got it, and do not ask for it. It is unjust, therefore, to them to retain it, in cities, towns and villages.

THE CASE OF JAMES GATES

Toronto Star.

The other day there appeared on this page a tiny editorial note saying that some newspapers urge that "that candid man, Mr. James Gates, be deported." That was all. We did not join in the suggestion; we merely chronicled it. It seemed to us that candor in itself was not a vice.

Along comes the Telegram, however, and works itself into a great state of mind over "the demand of the Toronto Star and other journals of the baser sort" that the Laurier Government should have power to order the deportation of an unconvicted man.

Let us assure our contemporary that we have not demanded the deportation of anybody, for this base and hateful journal is well aware that in a wide and populous country like this there will be all kinds of people. If we had the power to pick out a thousand men and transport them for life to a coral reef in the Pacific we do not believe we would exercise the power, unless, perhaps, in the case of two or three persons, and we doubt if Mr. Gates, of Peterborough would be one of them. He would not be our first choice, nor our second, nor our third. Our third choice would be—but why name him, since nothing can come of it!

How different it would be were the Telegram empowered to deport men! Soon this fair city would be nearly as empty and tenantless as the ruins of Nineveh. The mayor and aldermen with two exceptions, would be heading for the coral reefs in half an hour and most of the civic employees with them. The School Board would be packed off along with them. The drag net would next sweep all the other newspaper offices—not an errand boy would be spared. The Board of Trade members would be stacked up for shipment. The Railway Commission, the Library Board, nearly all the members of the Legislature, the Dominion Parliament, the Senate, the people who do not sign its marsh petition—but why pick and choose when the whole generation is perverse! With Captain Thomas Wallace, M.P., Ald. Thomas Foster, Ald. Thomas Church, and a most strangely assorted score of others, our contemporary would set up a city and a nation to its own liking. Not the squeak of an opinion would be permitted anywhere but in the Telegram office. The scanty and select populace would gather in Bay street at 3 p.m. daily to learn what to think. There would be no back talk from base and rascally sources.

Fortunately, our contemporary cannot banish anybody. But we could wish that it would become reconciled to life and enjoy these fine October days. Why not rise with the sun, like the editor of the World, and hunt mushrooms in the dewy grass! If it does not like to think about the Star why not forget it!

A NATIONAL PERIL

Sarnia Canadian.

The reports which have appeared in the press of the developments at the trial at Peterborough last week of the West Peterborough election case do not make pleasant reading for Canadian who would like to retain a good opinion of their country.

The testimony as to the bribery in the Peterborough case reveals the same sordid conditions which disgusted the country in the case of the London election trial. Witness after witness told how the word was passed round that there was money to be had at the Liberal headquarters; how men went there to see what the prospect was; and how, being introduced to a secluded side room, they found money tucked under the corners of books or lying around on the shelves, which the visitors were allowed to take possession of and carry away with them. The Liberal workers on the other hand testified that they knew nothing of any unlawful proceedings in connection with the election; that there was no election fund, nor any arrangement for paying out money on account of votes: and that if any money was handed out, it must have been by some irresponsible individual acting on his own account, and with no authority from any person connected with the Liberal organization.

These charges and denials of the use of money to influence voters, however, are by no means novel. They are but a repetition of what has been heard to wearisomeness before in Canadian election trials. What was particularly noticeable in the Peterborough case, was the shocking disregard for the sanctity of the oath which was indicated by the stories of the witnesses. The testimony fairly reeks with perjury. One man after another took the stand and swore positively to certain things as having happened; and man after man followed upon the other side and swore with equal positiveness that these things did not happen; the matters at issue being such that it is humanly impossible that the witnesses on either side could have been honestly mistaken. A whole company of witnesses who had told that they had received money from the Liberal side, afterwards recanted and made affidavit that their stories were untrue. Then they again testified that the denials which they had sworn to were false and had been extorted from them under threats of prosecution; and that the stories which they had originally told were the true ones. One witness, a Liberal election officer, told that he had sold himself to certain Conservatives to act as a spy in the Liberal committee rooms; that he had afterwards given his Conservative employers the "double-cross" and gone back to the Liberals; and had thenceforward by an arrangement with the Liberals, deceived the Conservatives by false reports of alleged illegal Liberal practices. Another witness unblushingly testified that he would be glad at any time to swear to a false affidavit if he "got the price," the price in the case in question being $400, which he had demanded, but which had been refused as being too high by the parties to whom he had offered to sell his services.

It has been said by cynical outsiders that with the growing disregard in this country for the sacredness of the oath, perjury is on the way to becoming the Canadian national crime. Certainly it is time to take a serious view of the situation, when a witness will stand up in a Canadian court and openly and even boastfully testify that he is willing to ply the trade of professional perjurer if the reward is made large enough. If perjured evidence can be bought in the open market, law and justice become a mockery.

Our Canadian courts have been altogether too tolerant in this matter of false swearing. Perjury is an offence which strikes at the very foundation of law and order. It is a menace to society and should be put down with the strong hand. In this Peterborough case it is pleasing to read that the Attorney-General for Ontario is devoting attention to the developments at the trial, that one arrest for perjury has been made, and that others are likely to follow. It is certainly high time that this evil was vigorously taken hold of; to the end that at least the worst of these glib perjurers who insult the courts may be brought to book for their offences, and made an example of for the whole country to see and profit by.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Hon. Mr. Justice Curran lately deceased seems to have earned the love and respect of his country. His death is universally regretted.

It is said that the German war scare is more immediately based on the small coal-carrying capacity of the new German dreadnoughts.

Those who are asking for a Government inquiry into the present political condition of West Peterborough cannot be accused of wishing to hide anything and vice versa.

That Anglican clergyman of Hamilton, who carried his quarrel to his opponent's grave and refused to allow another to hold the burial service over her—had better be taken in hand. He is in sore need of something.

The Montreal "Standard" thinks that West Peterborough is in a bad way politically, and that the law should be applied here unless elections are to be in future considered a farce. It speaks very caustically of bribe-takers and corruption-brokers.

All the election money, produced in the West Peterborough case, and as evidence of venality, is being returned to the principals in the contest. Some people will question whether this is the latest way of putting down bribery and corruption, though the act is legal.—Kingston Whig (Liberal).

The opinion seems to be that Mrs. Robinson is not the real murderess of the unfortunate children. If not who is? It is quite true that the horror of the whole affair is so great as to paralyse comment or criticism, but the authorities must keep their heads. If sentences are not to be carried out because the case or cases are really those of justifiable homicide, why make the law ridiculous by finding verdicts of "guilty?"

ANOTHER WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Gardiner, Maine.—"I have been a great sufferer from organic troubles and a severe female weakness. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation, but I could not bear to think of it. I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash—and was entirely cured after three months' use of them."—Mrs. S. A. Williams, R. F. D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner, Me.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made exclusively from roots and herbs, a fair trial.

This famous medicine for women has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and renewer of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cures female ills, and creates radiant, buoyant female health. If you are ill, for your own sake as well as those you love, give it a trial.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Disregard of Gold.

His Just Deserts.

Jones gave him an icy stare.

"You win!" he said, passing on.

Fully Appreciated.

Raymond, aged five, returned from Sunday school in a state of evident excitement. He strutted around the room as if about to burst with importance. The sympathetic eye of his mother was not slow to observe this.

"What's the matter, Raymond?" she asked.

"Oh, mother," exclaimed the small boy, his eyes sparkling, "the superintendent said something awful nice about me in his prayer this morning."

"What did he say?"

"He said, 'O Lord, we thank thee for food and Raymond.'"—Woman's Home Companion.

A Strong Guarantee.

"Are you sure these eggs are fresh?" asked the woman, eying them suspiciously.

"Yes, ma'am," replied the grocer, with emphasis. "I guarantee those eggs. If any of them aren't good I'll make 'em good!"—Lippincott's.

Where to Keep a Revolver at Night and How to Use It.

I take my pen in hand to write you an answer to the mug that signs his name "Victim" what says that a bolt on your bedroom door nights will make you safe from burglars coming into the room and shooting your head off and to tell him the only way to be safe from harm by burglars is to lay still when they tells you to and after they has gone to collect from the burglary insurance company.

Your man "Victim" is a dull guy if he thinks a bolt will stop any one that knows his trade, because we always puts a gimlet hole through the panel right back of the bolt and slides it back quiet and easy just the same way as we puts holes through the panel back of dead latches on outside doors, because there ain't nothing will stop a man that knows the trade only a steel door with an iron crossbar back of it and electric contacts all round.

What's more is that any man that sleeps with a pistol under his pillow is a chump, because that's where we always feels for it the first thing and gets it before proceeding to the business of the evening, the right place to keep a pistol being in the front hall hanging on a nail where you ain't liable to do no damage to the bedroom walls and furniture with it, besides its being bad for nervous people to wake up in the night and feel for a pistol that ain't there no more.

If a guy wants to take a pistol to bed with him and thinks he's got nerve enough to use it the proper place for it is not under the pillow, because that's where we always look for it, but it's at the foot of the bed, about where you can stretch out with your toes so that when you wake up and feel the burglar's hand searching under your pillow you can lay still till he moves over to the bureau, when you will have plenty of time to get hold of your gun with your toes and pull it up gentle and slow like you was still fast asleep till you get your grip on it and then if you are quick enough to make the burglar shoot in the smoke all right, but if you ain't got the nerve for the job you'd better not have no guns around, because he will shoot next.

Having been in the bolt slipping and pistol collecting business for nine years, I guess I know the game, and if I knowed where your mug "Victim" lives I would just come up some evening and pinch his gun for him to show him his bolt is no good.—Sloppy Mike in New York Sun.

"I'm surprised that you should be so interested in watching those silly dudes."

"Force of habit, I guess. I'm president of a real estate improvement company."

"Well?"

"Well, they're a vacant lot."

Worked the Collector.

M. Chauchard, the great French picture collector, was always adding to his pictures, and the higher the price the more anxious he was to secure the painting. A dealer one day offered him the "Vache Blanche," by Tryon. M. Chauchard was told he could have it for £1,600.

"It must be an imitation," he said. "Take it away."

The dealer told some of his colleagues, and they promised to get him £8,000 for the same picture if he would split the difference with them.

"Go ahead," he replied.

A few days later a Russian prince (?) visited M. Chauchard's galleries and remarked on leaving that he was delighted, but it was a pity the collection did not include an example of Tryon's work.

M. Chauchard, whose vanity was wounded by the remark, wrote to the dealer, "Bring me the 'Vache Blanche.'"

The reply was it was too late; it had been sold to a collector.

The millionaire connoisseur said he must have it at any price. He finished by securing it, but it cost him £10,000. —St. James Gazette.

Plenty of It.

"What was the fruit of your wife's millinery hunt?"

"A peach basket hat trimmed with apples, peaches and grapes. Would you want more fruit than that?"—Baltimore American.

Early Days of the Cookbook.

Of the making of cookbooks there is no end. One of the first was the work of Mrs. Elizabeth Raffald of Manchester, England, who was so much of a business woman that she was more than a century ahead of her time. She published her cookbook under the title "The English Housekeeper" in 1760, and it was so popular that it ran through a second edition the same year. A third edition was in press when Mrs. Raffald sold her rights to a London publisher for $7,000. It was a fortune to her, as she had been working for small wage as a housekeeper, but it turned out to be a poor business stroke, for the book ran through thirty-six editions. Mrs. Raffald, however, was resourceful, for she more than doubled her money by issuing Manchester's first directory in 1772. She got out the directory yearly until her death in 1781. Her cookbook was the first in English, and a second was not issued until several years after her death. Many of her recipes still go into cookbooks without alteration.

Her Application.

A teacher, after patiently defining words in a spelling lesson, gave the word "gruesome" to be put into a sentence, with this result from the brightest little girl in the class: "I cannot wear my last summer's dress because I grew some."

DOMESTIC FINANCE.

Pitiful Ignorance of the Average Girl Concerning Household Expenses.

Miss Grace Pitman, who lectures on domestic finance before schools and colleges, had an interesting experience recently when she lectured before a fashionable school for young women. She happened to have just been reading something about the army and noticed that the salary of lieutenants is $1,500. So when she stood up before her audience she announced that she would explain to them her system of administering an income of $1,500, which was the salary of a lieutenant in the United States army. A smile ran round the room, which became almost a titter. One girl right down in front of the lecturer had a very rosy face, but did not look at all happy. Miss Pitman divided up the income, showed what such a family would have to have and what the things would cost. She could allow only $10 a month for service, and that, she showed, would secure only one pitiful greenhorn in the kitchen. The lecturer's scheme allowed only $7.88 a week for food, and she showed what could be got for that amount. A young housekeeper, she said, could hardly be expected to feed her family for less than $10 a week, but an experienced housekeeper could do it for $6.

As the lecturer continued the girl down in front looked more and more sober. That evening she called upon the lecturer and explained the cause of the cheerful smiles of that afternoon. She was engaged—as all her schoolmates were aware—to a lieutenant and expected to marry him as soon as she was graduated in June. But now she was frightened. She did not know whether she would marry him or not.

"She had actually," said Miss Pitman, "had no idea of what it meant to live on $1,500 a year. She was planning to keep three servants. She had no idea that three servants could not be kept on this sum, and her mother was allowing her to marry this man with no conception of what it meant to live on his salary. Talk about [illegible] a week for food! Twenty dollars a week would not have sufficed for the girl."

"George, that man across the car is winking at me."

"Which one?"

"The little man. There, see! What are you going to do about it?"

"Guess I'll have to say something rude to him."

"Well, what will you say?"

"I'll suggest to him that he ought to consult an oculist."

Indian Rice Crop.

The final rice crop report shows that Bengal has 17,916,200 acres, against 19,636,300 last season. The normal area is 20,531,800 acres, but there was a lack of rain in Bihar at sowing season. The yield of winter rice in Bengal is estimated at 71,075 tons, against 57,930 tons last year.

A SWEET POT.

One of Grandmother's Customs Much Appreciated Today.

As the summer advances and the fields and gardens grow more glowing and beautiful each day with myriads of sweet smelling blossoms one naturally wonders if there is not some manner in which these treasures of the summer may be preserved to refresh us in the cold, blustering days of December. Our grandmothers utilized these blossoms in many ways. Not only did they sew up the petals of the fragrant rose into pillows and pack them away with salt for their rose jars, but combined with the rose petals they used spices, unguents and flowers of other variety, keeping the mixture carefully conserved in huge jars and conscientiously mixing it with a great wooden spoon at stated intervals. These "sweet pots," as the ladies of the eighteenth century called them, were to be found in every parlor, their fragrance when the lids were removed, as they were when grandmothers gave a tea drinking or some other formal festival, permeating the stately rooms and blending with that of the delicate Formosa which grandmother served in her priceless cups, brought forth for occasions of this kind.

In an old book of recipes, which bears the date of 1802 upon its title page, is found written upon the last page in the delicate, pointed handwriting of the last century the following rule for a sweet pot. It has been experimented with and found to be an everlasting delight to the woman who enjoys the quaint old world atmosphere which the perfume imparts to her drawing room:

"Take of benjamin, storax, myrrh, sweet orifice, zeddary, nutmeg, grains of paradise, cinnamon and cloves half an ounce each. Pound them in a mortar, throw in a handful of bay salt mixed with a little of the spiceries in the bottom of a large jar, then a layer of all kinds of sweet smelling flower leaves, with aromatic plants and herbs cut small. Over each layer of flowers or herbs put a handful of bay salt and some of the spiceries. It requires no more spiceries than directed for the whole of the jar, but more salt must be put between each layer of flowers or leaves, as the flowers must be gathered at different times of the year when in full blossom. Pick clean from stalks and leaves, such as violets, lily of the valley, roses, orange and lemon, clove pinks, gillyflower, lavender and thyme, rose geranium leaves, lemon verbena, sweetbrier, bay leaves, marjoram, etc. Keep in close covered jar for a month or two and on first opening stir with a wooden spoon. When wished to have a pleasant odor about your room open the jar and stir again. It improves by keeping."

Clever Jane.

The mistress wrote the word "Dirt" across the dusty table.

Then she called the attention of the maid.

"Jane," she chillingly said, "do you see that?"

The maid looked down and studied the inscription.

OUR MILLIONAIRES.

American Money Kings From a German Point of View.

In a satirical article entitled "The Natural History of American Millionaires" a writer in the Berliner Tageblatt says: "They all came to New York, Chicago or Philadelphia with one shirt and with one cent in the pocket of the only other garment. All served as bootblacks, errand boys or even in more humble positions and in the second week had saved enough to buy a waistcoat. After one month they appeared before their respective employers clad in new clothes and told them with imposing self confidence that the organization of their business was defective and required reorganization. A year later the boy has become a partner, in two years he has outstripped the former boss in wealth, and a year later he has grown smart enough to kill off the benefactor of other days. All American millionaires arise at 3 in the morning, eat and drink almost nothing, cease their work at midnight and allow only those to live whom they think are good enough to invite. Every dollar king founds a university, an opera, a museum or a picture gallery. Life becomes a burden to them when there are no more competitors in their branch worthy of destruction. Then they lie down and die of ennui."

Almost Heavenly.

"That is Saturn you see now," explains the astronomer, while the visitor to the observatory peers through the telescope at the mysterious orb with its rings and with its moons showing as little points of light.

"It's away off, isn't it?" asks the visitor.

"Oh, yes. Saturn is so far off that it requires thirty of our years to make the circuit around the sun."

"Thirty years!"

"Yes."

"My! Saturn must be pretty close to heaven."

"I couldn't say as to that."

"I should call it almost heavenly not to have to buy spring dresses and hats for my wife and daughters not more than once in thirty years."

For fear the visitor would have something to say about the summer engagements on Saturn being responsible for the rings, the astronomer quickly pointed the telescope toward Jupiter.—Chicago Post.

Doing a Man's Work.

The Widow Skinner has been twice bereaved, and she was telling me about her two husbands over a cup of tea.

"Boggs was the first," she said dreamily, "a ornery hound wot useter to git drunk and come home and lam baste me all over the place. After Boggs died I married Skinner. He was a good for nothin', ornery critter wot 'ud turn up full, and I'd lam him till he couldn't see."

She chuckled with quiet amusement.

"Well," said a listener, "the last was better than the first, at least."

But the widow shook her head.

"No, 'tw'an't," she said. "I'd kinder got used to Boggs' little ways, and in Skinner's case I never cottoned to the idea of doin' a man's work about the house."—Exchange.

Drifted Into It.

"Yes, I've managed to get into debt pretty deeply," said Kayrliss.

"Indeed," remarked Wise. "I gave you credit for more sense than you seem to have."

"H'm! The trouble was that my tailor gave me credit for more dollars than I seem to have," said Kayrliss.—Catholic Standard and Times.

Nothing to Offer.

"Have you," asked the judge of a recently convicted man, "anything to offer the court before sentence is passed?"

"No, your honor," replied the prisoner. "My lawyer took my last farthing."—London Mail.

No Pins In China.

When you talk of the awakening of China, its adoption of occidental ways and ideas, one class of business men will not agree with you—the manufacturers of pins. China frankly does not like the slender, sharp pointed instruments considered so necessary by the Caucasian woman, or hooks and eyes. It prefers loops, frogs or the simple string. Even the most persuasive of pin missionaries make very few converts. The great argument in favor of the pin—time saving—does not appeal to the Chinese. If they have anything, it is time. They were having it when our aboriginal ancestors were experimenting with common thorns, which were the pin's ancestors. They do not know what hurry means. They are not so strongly inclined toward applying its definition.—Van Norden's Magazine.

Ready to Do His Part.

An eccentric country squire agreed to employ an equally eccentric rustic to rid his mansion of its plague of flies, the terms being board, lodging and beer for three days. At the end of this period there were more flies than ever, and the squire interrogated his new employe thus: "Why ever haven't you made a start? You contracted to kill all the flies."

"I'm waiting for you, guv'nor," retorted the wily rustic; "you've got to catch 'em first. I only promised to kill 'em."—London News.

Carlsbad is full of original ideas. Where else can you find the photographs of all the doctors in the place arranged together in shop windows, so that a newcomer can examine the faces and pick out the one whose looks he prefers? WHERE RENT IS LOW AND BOARD'S CHEAP

Cost of Maintenance of Prisoners at Peterborough Gaol Only 8 3-4c Cents Each Per Day—Report for the Year Provides Interesting Statistics.

Keepers of boarding houses should take a course of training at the Peterborough jail. Some boarders may be unkind enough to say that the dispenser of this daily fare should be in jail on general principles, but there is another reason why those who conduct boarding houses should pay a visit to Castle Nesbitt. At the handsome stone building overlooking Victoria Park the boarders are kept at a cost of 8 3-4 cents per day. If those who keep boarders could get wise to the system used at the "hillside home" here is how they could get rich quick.

Revenue from one boarder per week, $3.50.

Cost of feeding said boarder for one week at 8 3-4 cents per day, 61 1-4c.

PROFIT—$2.88 3-4 per week.

Sheriff Hall has just forwarded to the Inspector of Prisons at Toronto his report of the Peterborough jail for the year ending September 30th, 1909, and some of the figures therein are of interest. The maintenance of the prisoners was only 8 3-4 cents each per day, which looks like a very moderate amount.

The report also shows that only one Scotsman was committed during the year and that there were almost fifty per cent fewer married persons committed than unmarried individuals. Eighty males and five females, married prisoners were committed as compared with one hundred and forty males and eleven females unmarried prisoners.

No cash revenue was derived from the prison labor. The expenditure for food, clothing, fuel and other items of maintenance except salaries and repairs, was $985.16. Officers' salaries were $1,400 and repairs nothing. The total expenditure was $2,385.16. The staple food supplies for the jail are obtained partly by tender.

KILLING NO MURDER CHILDREN VICTIMS OF FATE

The following request has been forwarded to the Review. An effort is being made to secure the commutation of Mrs. Robinson's sentence of death.

The Toronto District Women's Christian Temperance Union has instituted a post card petition in behalf of Mrs. Anna Robinson, now under sentence of death at Sudbury. Acting under legal advice, we, with good reason, believe if this campaign succeeds, her life will be spared and her friends will have time in which to take further measures.

We make, through the courtesy and generosity of the press a three-fold appeal.

1. Will every editor who receives this appeal kindly publish it in his next issue?

2. Will every man and woman who reads this request comply with its demands?

3. Will you do it AT ONCE, for the unhappy victim has only six weeks to live.

Our request is, write a postal card as follows;—

"I respectfully beg of you to recommend that the death sentence passed on Anna Robinson be commuted."

THE SAILORS' MISSIONARY AND HIS HEAVY LABORS

An Earnest Appeal by Mr. J. S. Potter — 25,000 Sailors and Only Four Missionary Workers — Financial Aid and Christian Co-operation are Needed.

the missionary aid they required from the churches and religious workers was most convincingly brought home in an appealing and earnest address last night at St. Andrew's church by Rev. J. S. Potter, father of Rev. G. Potter, pastor of St. Andrew's. At the morning service at Murray street Baptist church Mr. Potter addressed the congregation on the same subject. On the chain of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence and their tributary waters there are 25,000 sailors, with but four missionaries to grapple with the great work of bringing religious teaching to them, which is most essential in their lives when they are so unrestrained by any immediate ties of home or family, and are confronted by the greatest temptations. Four missionaries among a restless, moving congregation of 25,000 souls makes the administration an arduous and trying one, but despite the innumerable difficulties they have

Are the sailors in our inland waters neglected? That they are given to face the missionaries are doing a splendid work, and their labors have been fruitful with wide-reaching and encouraging results.

In the course of his address Mr. Potter outlined very fully the different phases of endeavor among the sailors, and told many touching little stories in connection with his long experience as a sailor's missionary. The splendid work of the distribution of the library boxes among the ships and the lumber camps by means of which the men are supplied, with interesting and helpful literature.

Financial aid is greatly needed for the carrying on of the work, and when the appeal is made to them it is to be hoped that the people of Peterborough will contribute substantially to a highly deserving cause.

BEATING HIS WAY

Peterborough Youth Goes to See Baseball Games at Detroit

Peterborough has at least one real baseball enthusiast. He is a youth of about seventeen summers, and he has gone to Detroit to see the Michigan city end of the championship series between the Tigers and Pittsburg. He did not like to stand the expense of riding in a Pullman, so he left Peterborough with the intention of "beating" his way to the home of Hughie Jennings' band. He pulled out of the city on a freight Saturday night and was confident that he would be able to reach Detroit without paying a cent for transportation. He is an experienced hand at "beating" the railways, and says he has travelled hundreds of miles without buying a ticket. When he left Peterborough on Saturday night he expected to reach Detroit in time to see to-day's game.

WHAT REV. PEARSON DID NOT SEE IN FRANCE

Last night Rev. E. A. Pearson, D. D., pastor of George street Methodist church, took as the subject of his sermon "Bad Habits," and startled his hearers by remarking that in two nights in Peterborough he had seen ten times more drunken men than during his tour in France, Germany, Italy, Holland and Belgium put together. In fact with an eye to such matters he descried but one drunken man abroad, and that one in Belgium. He also spoke of the evil habit of lying, and said that there had been some examples of it recently amongst "some of our own respected citizens."

"Let's Take An Old Fashioned Walk"
"I'm a Popular Man"
"Make a Lot of Noise"
"Honey Babe"
"Nothing New Beneath the Sun"
"The Hat My Dear Old Father Wore"
"Honest, Little Girly, I'm Strong for You" and 9 others.

Sunday, Oct. 17th—Children's Day; corporate communion of teachers, parents and all interested in Sunday school work at 8.30 a.m. All the services will have special reference to religious teaching. Children's service will be sung at 3 o'clock in the church, when a special offertory will be given to the support of the new organizing secretary for Sunday schools in the Diocese of Toronto.

Monday, Oct. 18, a special union meeting for St. Luke's, All Saints' and St. John's will be held in St. John's school at 8 p.m. This meeting is in charge of the Sunday school superintendents with Mr. Spence presiding. Come and take your part in this great work.

On Sunday next the offerings for the support of the Widows' and Orphans' Fund are asked for. Our appointment this year is $70. No other fund has such strong claims for our generous support as this one.

The attendance in the Sunday school is steadily mounting. The teachers and scholars are forming an orchestra, which has played the services for two Sundays. Miss Palmer, Cyril Devey, Mr. Common and Mr. R. Palmer are the present members, and two more violins are expected next week.

The W. A. asks for materials for this season's bale, instead of raising funds by an entertainment. Here is a splendid opportunity for any who are unable to help every week to help a noble work.

The King's Daughters ask for gifts of clothing for the deserving poor, to be sent to the school house.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

WEDDING BELLS

CREBA—GILCHRIST

A pretty wedding took place at 9 o'clock last evening in Wesley Methodist church, when Rev. R. A. Scarlett, married William Creba, of Maple Creek, Alta., and Miss Margaret May Gilchrist, of Winnipeg, the ceremony being witnessed by a number of intimate friends of the bride and groom. The bride, who was given away by Mr. Glenn, of Winnipeg, looked charming in her traveling suit of navy blue French serge, the long coat opening over a very handsome blouse of Japanese silk, beautifully hand-embroidered. Her hat was of black panne velvet trimmed with jet and two magnificant black plumes. She carried a bouquet of white roses and ferns. The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl pendant. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful presents, among which was noticed an oak case of cutlery and silver from the managers and employees of D. McCaul Co. Mr. and Mrs. Creba left for their new home in Maple Creek. Many friends were at the depot to see them off and extend best wishes for their future happiness.—Winnipeg Free Press, Oct. 7th.

Sir Knight John J. Titterson, D.S.C.,
Past Commander Tent No. 69,
K.O.T.M.

Dear Sir Knight,—On behalf of Tent No. 69, K.O.T.M., Peterborough, we have visited you to-night to express the regret which the knowledge of your departure to Ottawa gives us, and to wish you God-speed.

We shall miss you greatly in connection with the fraternal activities of our Tent, for you have always been zealous in its interests from the time you became associated with it as a charter member, your zeal and ability winning you the distinction of being appointed District Commander. In both your fraternal and personal relations to us you have won our respect as a Sir Knight, as a friend and as a citizen.

With our congratulations upon the faithful and efficient manner in which you have discharged your business duties, who practical recognition has always called you to a position of promotion in Ottawa, is mingled the regret that we shall be deprived of the pleasant associations that have marked the past.

In remembrance of our good wishes which go with you, we ask your acceptance of this Past Commander's jewel, which we are sure you will cherish as a reminder of a duty faithfully discharged, and also, we trust, as a pleasant reminder of your friends in Tent No. 69.

Wishing you and your family every prosperity and happiness in your new home, we bid you farewell in the name of our watchword, Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

PETERBORO'S GROUPINGS FOR ONTARIO TANKARD

Annual Meeting of Ontario Curling Association Will be Held a Week From To-morrow—Association Divided into Sixteen Groups.

The semi-annual meeting of the Ontario Curling Association will be held a week from to-morrow at the Victoria Club, Toronto, beginning at 11 o'clock. The grouping of the Ontario Tankard and also of the District Cup Competition are matters of most importance for consideration. The association is divided this year into 16 groups for the Tankard competition.

These notices of motion have been given:—

By Mr. J. D. Flavelle—That the Primaries for the Ontario Tankard be fixed for the third Tuesday in January, and for the District Cup competition the fourth Tuesday in January.

By Mr. R. Mahoney—That the returns for the Ontario Tankard and District Cup competitions be made to the secretary on or before the first day of February in each year.

That rule 2 of the Tankard competition be amended by substituting 16 for 18 in the fifth line, and striking out the words "except the final game which shall be of 22 ends."

By the secretary—That no association match can proceed except by consent of the clubs competing, unless there is four degrees of frost outside.

The Tankard and District Cup groupings in which Peterborough is included are as follows:

ONTARIO TANKARD GROUP

No. 2—Lindsay, Peterborough, Bobcaygeon, Beaverton, Port Hope. Play at Lindsay. Umpire, J. D. Flavelle.

DISTRICT GROUPING.

District No. 2—Section (a)—Peterborough, Keene, Lindsay, Fenelon Falls, Bobcaygeon, Lakefield, Beaverton. Play at Peterborough. Section (b)—Napanee, Kingston, Brockville, Prescott, Colborne, Port Hope, Belleville. Play at Kingston. Umpire, T. F. Matthews. Winner Section A vs. winner Section B. Place of play to be arranged by umpire.

OLD BOYS WERE DOWNED BY THE STRATHCONAS

The Gates Were Locked and the Teams Played to an Empty Grand Stand—Score 5-3.

Seven innings of baseball were sufficient for the Old Boys and the Strathconas at Riverside Park Saturday afternoon, the players on both teams suffering from the effects of being out of harness for the past several weeks. The never-grow-olds were defeated by their more youthful opponents by the score of 5—3, the contest furnishing several features. One was the absence of the large number of fans who fully intended to see the exhibition, but were not permitted to on account of the action of the Old Boys' manager who framed up a deal with the owners of the grounds to keep all the gates locked. The game worked alright, but it did not stop a few of the more ardent ones from jumping the fence and making for the grandstand to witness the downfall of the Burridge, Edmunds, Graham, Flaherty, Parnall, Sheridan aggregation. The game proved to be of such an interesting character, that the pigskin chasers assembled for practice stopped proceedings to sit down and take notice. Yeb. Flaherty and Gorham opposed each other in the box, but neither extended themselves—neither did the players behind them.

Some smart hitting was done by the players of both nines, and the third baseman of the Strathconas is to be commended for the manner in which he dodged that drive of Edmunds', for if it had connected, manager Metherat would be minus a hockey player for the coming season.

THE GAME.

First Innings.

Old Boys—Wally Parnall, first up, struck out. Burridge was given a pass and stole second and third, scoring when M. O'Brien dropped Ray's throw of Edmunds' grounder. Dobson threw high to second to stop Edmunds, and the runner made the circuit. Flaherty was out, Quinlan to O'Brien, and Graham grounded out, Ray to O'Brien. Two runs.

Strathconas—M. O'Brien was hit, but was forced out at second by Shaw, who stole second and was sacrificed to third by H. O'Brien. Quinlan singled through the pitcher, Shaw scoring. Kendrey fanned. One run.

Second Innings.

Old Boys went out in order.

Strathconas—Dobson flew out to Flaherty. Ray hit safely and stole second. Curtis fanned. Gorham was safe on Graham's fumble, and Ray counted. M. O'Brien's hit to centre scored Gorham, the runner going to third and crossing the plate when Shaw bunted down the third base line. H. O'Brien out, Flaherty to Graham. Three runs.

Third Innings.

Old Boys—Doherty went out, Gorham to M. O'Brien and Parnall struck out. Burridge hit to centre and scored on Edmunds' triple. Flaherty fanned. One run.

Strathconas—Quinlan was safe on Sheridan's fumble of his drive, but Dooley redeemed himself by getting under Kendrey's high buff. Edmunds threw to catch Quinlan at third, but Parnall let the ball get away from him and the runner scored. Dobson hit safely. Ray struck out and Curtis went out, Flaherty to Graham. One run.

SENIOR RUGBY ON SATURDAY

Locals Will Meet Parkdale at Riverside Park—Practice Every Night

The senior Rugby season will open here on Saturday afternoon, when the locals will meet the Parkdale Canoe Club, of Toronto, at Riverside Park. The make-up of the Peterborough team is as yet unknown and the fourteen will not be picked till the end of the week. It looks, however, as if there would be several new faces on the team, as a number of the youngsters are showing up well in practice and are working with great vim. Vincent Corkery may be found on the back division, as he has demonstrated that he has a fair knowledge of the game and that he is fleet of foot and a reliable catch. "Tick" Thornton, one of the braves of other days, has turned out again and will likely be found on the team Saturday.

About twenty players were at work at Riverside Park Saturday afternoon and were kept hard at it by Dr. MacPherson who is doing the coaching. Practices will be held every night this week and the team should be working smoothly by Saturday. The Toronto team will find that they are not going to have a cinch.

SPORTING NOTES

Ty. Cobb, by way of getting in right with the Pittsburg fans, states that Hans Wanger is undoubtedly the greatest ball player living.

It is estimated that 40,000 people will witness the game between Detroit and Pittsburg.

A Peterborough man who picked Pirates to beat Detroit on Saturday, Shamrocks to beat Montreal and Hamilton Tigers to trim Ottawa, is wondering what struck him. He was in wrong in every case and is glad that he did not back his opinion with money.

Ben Simpson's braves failed to hold Ottawa in the Capital on Saturday, but the score was so close that it looks as if the fight for the big league honors will again be between the Hamilton and Ottawa fourteens although Montreal will have to be reckoned with. Argos do not appear to have a chance unless they improve a whole lot.

The unexpected happened at Toronto on Saturday when Parkdale Canoe Club romped away from the T.A.A.C. and won the opening game of the senior O.R.F.U. Parkdale play here next Saturday and it looks as if they were the team to beat for the championship. The locals will have to do some tall hustling this week to get going fast enough to pull out a victory.

A sporting combination is said to have offered a $70,000 purse for the Jeffries-Johnston fight if Johnston will fight at Galveston, Texas. The scheme is to build a pavilion in the rock jetties five miles out in the gulf to accommodate 15,000 to 20,0000 people. The Texas prize fight laws extend only three miles from shore.

The Eel, driven by McEwen, won the 2.00 pace in two straight heats from Baron Whips and Aileen Wilson at Lexington, Ky. The purse was $1,200. Time for the heats—2.02 3-4, 2.03 1-4.

In the final game for the championship in the second series of the Inter-city Baseball League, played in Brantford on Saturday, the Goold-Shapley and Muir team of Brantford defeated West End Pleasure Club of Hamilton 3 to 0. Brantford will now play off with St. Patrick's Club, Hamilton, winners of the first series for the inter-city championship.

"Punch" Cameron made a try for Montreal Saturday by a 40 yard run.

Park Nine won both games from the Wellingtons in Toronto Saturday and are now the champions of the Senior City Leaue. Hickey pitched both games for the winners.

The annual Field Day of the Lakefield Preparation School will be held on Wednesday.

An endeavor will be made to get a Peterborough baseball team to play here next Tuesday.—Lindsay Warder.

Mr. H. G. Simpson, accountant of the local branch of the Traders Bank, has been transferred to the head office at Toronto. Mr. Simpson will be greatly missed in the village, as he took a prominent part in hockey and other sports. His many friends wish him every success in his new home.—Lakefield News.

Peterborough is well represented on the big league rugby circles. Ben Simpson is with the Hamilton Tigers, Jack Corkery with the Argonauts, of Toronto, and Bert Cameron in on the Montreal line-up. That's fair enough.

GUELPH'S BIG MEET.

One day recently Thos. J. Hannigan and J. P. Downey, M.P.P., two well-known sports of Guelph, waited on the Executive Committee of the C.A.A.U. in Toronto and made them some very important requests with respect to the holding of the big annual Thanksgiving Day meet of the Guelph Cross Country Run and Road Race Association in their city.

What Mr. Downey and Mr. Hannigan wanted was the permission of the Union to give prizes at their meet of a considerable greater value than those which are allowed for in the rules of the Union. Owing to the fact that it has always been the failing of the management of the Guelph meet to be lavish in their dealings with prize winners, the C. A. A. U. Executive granted their request.

So it is that this year, as for the past fourteen years, the Guelph Road Race Association are preparing to put up the biggest list of valuable prizes ever offered for an annual athletic event. The prizes last year totalled in value about $800, and the number and value of them will likely be increased this year.

Thos. Hewer is the president of the Guelph association this year, and W. F. Watson is the secretary.

The list of races they have arranged for this coming thanksgiving Day is as follows:

MORNING PROGRAMME.

Boys under 12 years of age, one mile (local.)

P.C.I. DEFEATED AT PORT HOPE

T. C. S. Was Stronger Than in the First Game

The local Collegiates ran up against a tough proposition at Port Hope on Saturday, when they played the return game with Trinity College school and were defeated 22—0 the figures at half-time being 11—0. The score does not indicate the play as the P. C. I. team put up a good argument at all stages of the game, but were unable to score. The wing men were weak at times and this permitted the opposing players to break through and prevent accurate kicking. The locals were off color in tackling and this failing helped the Port Hope team, who were much stronger than when they played here. A large number of rooters accompanied the locals. Allan Campbell refereed.

Some great lengths in golf drives are being reached by some of the members of the Peterborough Golf Club this autumn. Dr. Gowan the well-known Brock street dentist drove a ball recently from the 7th tee past the 229-yard bunker, a total length of probably 240 yards. There was a slight breeze blowing behind him at the time, but under similar conditions with a stiffer breeze, it took Mr. Lyons' hardest blow to reach the same distance.

Bowlers to Meet

A meeting to organize a bowling league will be held at the P.B.C. alleys to-morrow night at eight o'cloc. All interested are requested to be present.

DETROIT WINS ONE.

Tigers Wallop Pirates In a Sensational Game.

Forbes Field, Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 11.—Detroit on Saturday evened up the count in the world's championship series by defeating Pittsburg 7 to 2, in a one-sided game at Forbes Field. The Detroit players batted Camnitz hard in the early innings, and he was succeeded by Willis in the third inning. Willis was also hit hard in the fifth inning, and Detroit scored two more runs off him.

The first inning was all Pittsburg, but after that the National League champions were never in the running for a moment. Two two-baggers and a base on balls off "Wild Bill" Donovan, in the first innings, was the end of their ability to hit him. After this he became better every inning, and the hard hitting Pittsburg men were absolutely helpless before his brilliant twirling. Only three hits were made off Donovan after the first inning.

One of the sensational features was a brilliant steal of home by Ty. Cobb in the third inning on the first ball pitched by Willis. Gibson was so surprised at the unexpected feat of Cobb that he dropped the ball as Cobb slid under the plate.

Best Man In the Service.

When Commissioner Leupp of the Indian bureau searched the records of his department "for the best man in his service" to send to the Mission reservations in California he picked Miss Clara True. His reason for desiring the most capable man in his service was because of the desperate condition into which the Mission Indians had fallen through the operations of a strong whisky ring which had established a strong hold on the Indians and which never had been successfully coped with. Miss True has already won marked success in the same line of work at the Morongo reservation, in California. Here the liquor evil had become a scourge, and the Indians were notorious throughout the state for their lawlessness.

What that little woman endured in her struggle to evict the whisky ring that had operated at such profit for years her eastern sisters can scarcely realize. She was first offered bribes, then intimidation of every sort, from the circulation of unpleasant stories about her to anonymous letters threatening death, and finally she was shot at from ambush. And in addition to all this trouble with the whisky men she was forced to fight land thieves and cattlemen who had been in the habit of using Indian land as though it was their own. But in the end she was the victor, and the Mission reservation is rapidly becoming one of the models of the Indian office.

Miss True weighs only 110 pounds, but she is as lithe as years of riding in the saddle can make her. She is approaching her fortieth birthday.

An Inspiration.

When a fair young girl with sunny hair, red lips, white teeth and gentle manners is seen earning her living and her mother attending to marketing and meals it can but rouse every spark of decency and chivalry in the young men. Perhaps they think, "But for father or brother my mother and sister might be doing the same for a lot of us fellows, and I'd punch the head of any one who was impolite or disrespectful."

Match the sunshine with your smiles. Help the birds in filling the earth with music. Feel yourself a part of this busy, happy, awakening world and show it by your looks and acts.

Tibetan Skull Drums.

A drum of an extreme repulsiveness of nature is one used by the lamas of Tibet at some of their church ceremonies. For this the craniums of two skulls, preferably children's, are taken, and over the concave side of each is stretched the skin of a snake. The two skulls are then cemented at the vertice to either side of a wooden disk covered with a cotton cloth, the stretched skins being outermost. These drums are often ornamented by having the heads of devils and such like horrors, the more repulsive the better, painted upon them in red and blue colors. The method employed in playing them is rather curious. To the wooden disk between the two halves a cord is fastened by which the drum can be suspended and then rapidly rotated. Two short cords with knobs at their ends hang down in such a way that as the drum revolves they strike alternately on either face and thus produce a regular "tum, tum."

Probably Hanged.

A writer in the Argonaut tells of the sister of Lord Houghton, who was frequently annoyed at the guests whom her brother brought to the house.

"Do you remember, my dear," he asked her at dinner one day, "whether that famous scoundrel X. was hanged or acquitted?"

"He must have been hanged," she replied, "or you would have had him to dinner long ago."

"The Fighting Chance."

"Is that all?" demanded Selwyn sharply.

"Yes, all. I know I have behaved shamefully"—

"I've seen," observed Selwyn in a dry, hard voice, "worse behavior than yours. Have you a pencil, Gerald? Get a sheet of paper from that desk. Now, write out a list of the loans made you by Neergard—every cent, if you please—and the exact amount you placed to Mrs. Ruthven's credit. Have you written that? Let me see it."

The boy handed him the paper. He studied it without the slightest change of expression, knowing all the while what it meant to him, knowing that this burden must be assumed by himself, because Austin would never assume it. But the thought of the cost sent a shiver over him and left his careworn face gray.

After a moment he turned to Gerald, a smile on his colorless face, and said:

"It will be all right, my boy. You are not to worry. Do you understand me? Go to bed now. You need the sleep. Go to bed, I tell you. I'll stand by you. You must begin all over again, Gerald, and so must I—and so must I."

Chapter 22

SELWYN had gone to New York with Gerald "for a few days," as he expressed it, but it was now the first week in October, and he had not yet returned to Silverside.

A brief note to Nina thanking her for having had him at Silverside and speaking vaguely of some business matters which might detain him indefinitely; a briefer note to Eileen regretting his inability to return for the present, were all the communications they had from him except news brought by Austin, who came down from town every Friday.

A long letter to him from Nina still remained unanswered. Austin had seen him only once in town. Lansing, now back in New York, wrote a postscript in a letter to Drina, asking for Selwyn's new address, the first intimation anybody had that he had given up his lodgings on Lexington avenue.

Eileen had not written him. His sudden leave taking nearly a month ago had so astounded her that she could not believe he meant to be gone more than a day or two. Then came his note, written at the Patroons' club, very brief, curiously stilted and formal, with a strange tone of finality through it, as though he were taking perfunctory leave of people who had come temporarily into his life and as though the chances were agreeably even of his ever seeing them again.

The girl was not hurt as yet; she remained merely confused, incredulous, unreconciled.

It was possible now to ride cross country, and Nina, who was always in terror of an added ounce to her perfect figure, rode every day with Eileen, and Austin, on a big hunter, joined them two days in the week.

There were dances, too, and Nina went to some of them. So did Eileen, who had created a furore among the younger brothers and undergraduates, and the girl was busy enough with smiling and motoring and dashing through the sound in all sorts of power boats.

Truly, for her, the world was still green, the sun bright, the high sky blue, but she had not forgotten that the earth had been greener, the sun brighter, the azure above her more splendid—once upon a time—like the first phrase of a tale that is told. And if she were at times listless, absent eyed, subdued, a trifle graver or unusually silent, seeking the still paths of the garden as though in need of youthful meditation and the quiet of the sunset hour, she never doubted that that tale would be retold for her again. Only, alas, the fair days were passing, and the russet rustle of October sounded already among the curling leaves in the garden, and he had been away a long time, a very long time, and she could not understand.

On one of Austin's week end visits, the hour for conjugal confab having arrived between husband and wife, he said, with a trace of irritation in his voice:

"I don't know where Phil is or what he's about. I'm wondering—he's got the Selwyn conscience, you know—what he's up to and if it's any kind of damfoolishness. Haven't you heard a word from him, Nina?"

Nina, in her pretty night attire, had emerged from her dressing room, locked out Kit-Ki and her maid and had curled up in a big, soft armchair, cradling her bare ankles in her hand.

"I haven't heard from him," she said. "Rosamund saw him in Washington—passed him on the street. He was looking horribly thin and worn, she wrote. He did not see her."

"Now, what in the name of common sense is he doing in Washington?" exclaimed Austin wrathfully. "Probably breaking his heart because nobody cares to examine his chaosite. By the way, Nina, Gerald has done rather an unexpected thing. I saw him last night. He came to the house and told me that he had just severed his connection with Julius Neergard's company."

"I'm glad of it!" exclaimed Nina. "I'm glad he showed the good sense to do it!"

"Well, yes. As a matter of fact, Neergard is going to be a very rich man some day, and Gerald might have— But I am not displeased. What appeals to me is the spectacle of the boy acting with conviction on his own initiative. Of course he can, if he chooses, begin everything again and come in with me, or, if I am satisfied that he has any ability, he can set up some sort of real estate office on his own book."

Nina hesitated, another idea intruding.

"Austin, the Orchil boy, the one in Harvard, proposed to Eileen, the little idiot! She told me. Thank goodness, she still does tell me things! Also the younger and chubbier Draymore youth has offered himself after a killingly proper interview with me. I thought it might amuse you to hear of it."

"It might amuse me more if Eileen would get busy and bring Philip into camp," observed her husband.

"Do you know," said Nina, "that I believe he is in love with her?"

"Then why doesn't"—

"I don't know. I was sure—I am sure now—that the girl cares more for him than for anybody. And yet—and yet I don't believe she is actually in love with him."

After a moment Nina's face grew grave, and she bent forward.

"Alixe is ill. Nobody seems to know what the matter is. Nobody has seen her. But she's at Clifton, with a couple of nurses, and Rosamund heard rumors that she is very ill indeed. People go to Clifton for shattered nerves, you know. There is mental trouble in her family. You have heard of it as well as I. You know her father died of it."

"The usual defense in criminal cases," observed Austin, flicking his cigarette end into the grate. "I'm sorry, dear, that Alixe has the jumps. Hope she'll get over 'em. But, as for pretending I've any use for her, I [illegible] and don't and won't. She spoiled [illegible] for the best man I know. She [illegible] his reputation into a cocked hat, and he, with his chivalrous Selwyn conscience, let her do it. I did like her once. I don't like her now, and that's natural, and it winds up the matter."

• • • • • • •

Ruthven was at that very moment seated in a private card room at the Stuyvesant club with Sanxon Orchil, George Fane and Bradley Harmon, and the game had been bridge, as usual, and had gone very heavily against him.

Several things had gone against Mr. Ruthven recently. For one thing, he was beginning to realize that he had made a vast mistake in mixing himself up in any transactions with Neergard.

When he, at Neergard's cynical suggestion, had consented to exploit his own club—the Siowitha—and had consented to resign from it to do so, he had every reason to believe that Neergard meant either to mulct them heavily or buy them out. In either case, having been useful to Neergard, his profits from the transaction would have been considerable.

But even while he was absorbed in figuring them up—and he needed the money, as usual—Neergard coolly informed him of his election to the club, and Ruthven, thunderstruck, began to perceive the depth of the underground mole tunnels which Neergard had dug to undermine and capture the stronghold which had now surrendered to him.

Rage made him ill for a week, but there was nothing to do about it. He had been treacherous to his club and to his own caste, and Neergard knew it, and knew perfectly well that Ruthven dared not protest, dared not even whimper.

Then Neergard began to use Ruthven when he needed him, and he began to permit himself to win at cards in Ruthven's house, a thing he had not dared to do before. He also permitted himself more ease and freedom in that house, a sort of intimacy, even a certain jocularity.

Meanwhile Neergard had almost finished with Gerald. He had only one further use for him, and as his social success became more pronounced with the people he had crowded in among he became bolder and more insolent, no longer at pains to mole tunnel toward the object desired, no longer overcareful about his mask. And one day he asked the boy very plainly why he had never invited him to meet his sister. And he got an answer that he never forgot.

Ruthven had viewed with indifference Gerald's boyish devotion to his wife, which was even too open and naive to be of interest to those who witnessed it. But he had not counted on Neergard's sudden hatred of Gerald, and the first token of that hatred fell upon the boy like a thunderbolt when Neergard whispered to Ruthven one night at the Stuyvesant club and Ruthven, exasperated, had gone straight home, to find his wife in tears and the boy clumsily attempting to comfort her, both her hands in his.

"Perhaps," said Ruthven [illegible], "you have some plausible [illegible] for this sort of thing. If you haven't, you'd better trump up one to-[illegible], and I'll send you my attorney to hear it. In that event," he added, "you'd better leave your joint address when you find a more convenient house than mine."

As a matter of fact, he had really meant nothing more than the threat and the insult, the situation permitting him a heavier hold upon his wife and a new grip on Gerald in case he ever needed him, but threat and insult were very real to the boy, and he knocked Mr. Ruthven flat on his back, the one thing required to change that gentleman's pretense to deadly earnest.

Ruthven scrambled to his feet. Gerald did it again, and after that Mr. Ruthven prudently remained prone during the delivery of a terse but concise opinion of him expressed by Gerald.

After Gerald had gone Ruthven opened first one eye, then the other, then his mouth and finally sat up, and his wife, who had been curiously observing him, smiled.

She dropped her folded hands into her lap, gazing coolly at him, but there was a glitter in her eyes which arrested his first step toward her.

"I think," she said, "that you mean my ru[illegible] mind has become curiously clear [illegible] the [illegible] year—strangely and unusually limpid and precise. Why, my poor friend, every plot of yours and of your friends, every underhand attempt to discredit and injure me, has been perfectly apparent to me. You supposed that my headaches, my outbursts of anger, my wretched nights, passed in tears, and the long, long days spent kneeling in the ashes of dead memories, all these you supp[illegible] weakened, perhaps unsettled, [illegible] lie if you deny it, for [illegible] doctors watching me for [illegible] didn't know I was aware of it, did you? But I was, and I am. And you told them that my father died of—of brain trouble, you coward! What a credulous fool you are," she said, "to build your hopes of a separation on any possible mental disability of mine!"

He stood a moment without answering, then quietly seated himself. The suspicious glimmer in his faded eyes had become the concentration of a curiosity almost apprehensive.

"Go on," he said. "What else?"

"For the remainder of the spring and summer," she said, "I shall make my plans regardless of you. I shall not go to Newport. You are at liberty to use the house there as you choose. And, as for this incident with Gerald, you had better not pursue it any further. Do you understand?"

He nodded, dropping his hands into his coat pockets.

"Now you may go," she said coolly.

He went, not, however, to his room, but straight to the house of the fashionable physician who ministered to wealth with an unction and success that had permitted him in summer time to occupy his own villa at Newport and dispense further ministrations when requested.

• • • • • • •

On the night of the conjugal conference between Nina Gerard and her husband and almost at the same hour Jack Ruthven, hard hit in the card room of the Stuyvesant club, sat huddled over the table, figuring up what sort of checks he was to draw to the credit of George Fane and Sanxon Orchil.

And now as he sat there, pencil in hand, adding up the score cards he remembered that he was to interview his attorney that evening at his own house, a late appointment, but necessary to insure the presence of one or two physicians at a consultation to definitely decide what course of action might be taken to rid himself of the wife who had proved useless and almost ruinous to him.

He had not laid eyes on his wife that summer, but for the first time he had really had her watched during her absence. What she lived on, how she managed, he had not the least idea and less concern. All he knew was that he had contributed nothing, and he was quite certain that her balance at her own bank had been nonexistent for months. In the autumn he had heard of her conduct at Hitherwood House, and a week later, to his astonishment, he learned of her serious illness and that she had been taken to Clifton. It was the only satisfactory news he had had of her in months.

When [illegible] had fin[illegible] his figuring he fished out a check book, detached a tiny gold fountain pen from the bunch of seals and knickknacks on his watch chain and, filling in the checks, passed them over without comment.

As they filed out of the card room into the dim passageway, Orchil leading, a tall, shadowy figure in evening dress stepped back from the door of the card room against the [illegible] them right of way, and [illegible] peering at him without rec[illegible] in the dull light, bowed suavely [illegible] so did Fane, craning his cur[illegible] and Harmon also, who followed in his wake.

But when Ruthven came abreast of the figure in the passage and bowed his way past a low voice from the courteous unknown, pronouncing his name, halted him short.

"I want a word with you, Mr. Ruthven," added Selwyn; "that card room will suit me, if you please."

But Ruthven, recovering from the shock of Selwyn's voice, started to pass him without a word.

"I said that I wanted to speak to [illegible]" repeated Selwyn.

Ruthven, deigning no reply, attempted to shove by him, and Selwyn, placing one hand flat against the other's shoulder, pushed him violently [illegible] into the card room he had just left and, stepping in behind him, closed and locked the door.

"W-what the devil do you mean?" gasped Ruthven, his hard, minutely shaven face turning a deep red.

"What I say," replied Selwyn—"that I want a word or two with you."

He stood still for a moment in the center of the little room, tall, gaunt of feature and very pale.

"Ruthven," he said, "a few years ago you persuaded my wife to leave me, and I have never punished you. There were two reasons why I did not. The first was because I did not wish to punish her, and any blow at you would have reached her heavily. The second reason, subordinate to the first, [illegible] in these days [illegible] to suspend a vio[illegible] the unwritten law as a [illegible] to civilization. This second [illegible] ever, depends entirely upon [illegible] you see.

Filling in the checks.

"I h[illegible]e—ah—invited you here to explain to you the present condition of your own domestic affairs"—he looked at Ruthven full in the face—"to ex[illegible] them to you and to lay down f[illegible] the course of conduct which you are to follow."

"By God!" began R[illegible], stepping back, one [illegible] reaching for the doorknob, but Selwyn's voice rang out clean and sharp:

"Sit down!"

And, as Ruthven glared at him out of his little eyes, "You'd better sit down, I think," said Selwyn softly.

Ruthven turned, took two unsteady steps forward and laid his heavily ringed hand on the back of a chair. Selwyn smiled, and Ruthven sat down.

"Now," continued Selwyn, "for certain rules of conduct to govern you during the remainder of your wife's lifetime. And your wife is ill, Mr. Ruthven—sick of a sickness which may last for a great many years or may be terminated in as many days. Did you know it?"

Ruthven snarled.

"Yes, of course you knew it, or you suspected it. Your wife is in a sanitarium, as you have discovered. She is mentally ill—rational at times, violent at moments and for long periods quite docile, gentle, harmless, content to be talked to, read to, advised, persuaded. But during the last week a change of a certain nature has occurred which—which, I am told by competent physicians, not only renders her case beyond all hope of ultimate recovery, but threatens an earlier termination than was at first looked for. It is this: Your wife has become like a child again, occupied contentedly and quite happily with childish things. She has forgotten much. Her memory is quite gone. How much she does remember it is impossible to say."

His head fell. His brooding eyes were fixed on the rug at his feet. After awhile he looked up.

"I understand that you are contemplating proceedings against your wife. Are you?"

"Yes, I am," said Ruthven.

"On the grounds of her mental incapacity?"

"Yes."

"Then, as I understand it, the woman whom you persuaded to break every law, human and di[illegible] for your sake you now propose to a[illegible]ndon. Is that it?"

Ruthven made no reply.

"You propose to publish her [illegible] plight to the world by be[illegible] proceedings. You intend t[illegible] public of your wife's infirmity by divorcing her."

"Sane or insane," burst out Ruthven, "she was riding for a fall, and she's going to get it! What the devil are you talking about? I'm not accountable to you. I'll do what I please. I'll manage my own affairs."

"No," said Selwyn; "I'll manage this particular affair. And now I'll tell you how I'm going to do it. I have in my lodgings, or, rather, in the small hall bedroom which I now occupy, an army service revolver in fairly good condition. I shall give myself the pleasure of using it on you if you ever commence any such action for divorce or separation against your wife. This is final."

Pushed him violently back into the card room.

Ruthven stared at him as though hypnotized.

A SUIT OVER A PICTURE MACHINE

Being Heard Before His Honor Judge Huycke

An interesting case was heard before his Honor, Judge Huycke, last week. The plaintiff was H. S. Guthrie, of the Crystal Theatre, Barrie, and he took action against Mr. W. A. Edwards, of the Crystal in Peterborough, for the recovery of $60 he paid for an Edison second-hand moving picture machine and expenses, etc., connected therewith, amounting in all to $100.

Several witnesses were called for both sides. The plaintiff claims that the machine was not as represented and that he could not get a good picture from it. The defendant claimed that the machine was in perfect running order when shipped to Barrie, and that the plaintiff had seen it in operation and was satisfied. When the machine arrived here again from Barrie it was loosely packed and the defendant refused to accept it.

After the evidence was all in the case was adjourned until Wednesday, when the lawyers will present their arguments before his Honor.

NOT FAIR TO PICK ON ONE OUT OF MANY

Says Peterboro Magistrate When Robert Sheppard Was Arraigned Charged With Perjury

Peterborough, Ont., Oct. 9.—"I think one-half of the town should be brought up for taking bribes and the other half for perjury," remarked Magistrate Dumble at the police court this morning, when the case of Robert Sheppard, charged with swearing falsely in connection with the recent West Peterborough election protest, came up before him.

"Now that the 'war is over,' is it the intention to go on with this charge?" asked his Worship. "It is hardly fair to 'pick' on one man. The whole lot should be brought here."

Crown Attorney R. E. Wood stated that this case would proceed. At the request of the counsel for the defendant, it was further enlarged until Thursday next. Bail of $1,000 was renewed.—Toronto Star.

Family Seek a Home

Mr. George Howson has received word that a Mr. F. E. Stacey, wife and child will arrive in Peterborough from England on Saturday with a view of securing a home with a farmer. The man has a good knowledge of horses and is handy with tools. The wife is a splendid cook and dressmaker. Any farmer in need of such help should apply to Mr. Howson at once, at the Emigration Office, Water street.

Outdoor for October

It is only fitting that Canada, the greatest agricultural country in the world, should lay claim to the greatest outdoor market on the continent. It is fitting, too, that this market should be located at Hamilton, the centre of the wonderful Niagara fruit district, and it is eminently proper that the story of that great outdoor market, copiously illustrated, should be told in Outdoor Canada's October issue, which is now on sale at all news stands. The issue is a notable one, containing a wonderful amount of interesting reading and a wealth of splendid illustrations, the whole printed on the finest of paper and with a handsome four-leaf cover design. Among the articles of special interest are Canada's International Exposition, Mount Robson's Summit Scaled, Moose in the Cassiar District, Through New Ontario, and the Railroad Photographer. A Muskoka Romance, by Herbert Shearer, and A Wild Boar's Skin, by Lieutenant Percival Lancaster, are short stories well worth reading, while sports and the Kennel—important regular departments—are up to their usual high mark. At the price—10 cents—Outdoor Canada is splendid value.

FOR THE LADY WHO CALLS

The lady who has a large circle of acquaintances always finds it a difficult matter to keep track of the reception days of her friends and often mistakes are made, that might have been avoided if care were taken to make a record of such days. And then there are the teas, at homes, and parties to be remembered too and when a hostess is planning an affair, she is always worried lest she overlook some one who has extended hospitality to her some time previous. To avoid these mistakes, a social register has been issued by the Review, that will be a boon to the busy lady. There are pages for each day of the month on which the record of the calls received and paid with the address of the visitor appear, then there are pages for social engagements, visits paid, addresses and memoranda, all of which prove very valuable data to have. These books are on sale at all the book stores and at the Review Office for 50 cents and there has already been a good demand for them.

A CANINE HERO.

The Story of Scotch, an Obedient and Loyal Dog.

A most interesting as well as a most pathetic dog story is related by Enos A. Mills in his book, "Wild Life on the Rockies." Mr. Mills and his dog Scotch were on a four days' tramp on the summit of a desolate and lofty range far above the timber line, and Mr. Mills stopped to take some photographs. The work required that he should remove his sheepskin mittens, which he placed in his coat pocket. The story follows:

From time to time as I climbed the summit of the continental divide I stopped to take photographs, but on the summit the cold pierced my silk gloves, and I felt for my mittens, to find that one of them was lost.

I stopped, put an arm around Scotch, and told him I had lost a mitten and that I wanted him to go down for it to save me trouble.

Instead of starting off willingly, as he had invariably done before in obedience to my commands, he stood still. I thought he had misunderstood me, so I patted him and then, pointing down the slope, said: "Go for the mitten, Scotch. I will wait here for you."

He started for it, but went unwillingly. He had always served me so cheerfully that I could not understand, and it was not until late the next afternoon that I realized that he had loyally and at the risk of his life tried to obey me.

My cabin, 18 miles away, was the nearest house, and the region was utterly wild. I waited a reasonable time for Scotch to return, but he did not come back. As it was late in the afternoon and growing colder, I decided to go on toward my cabin along a route that I felt sure he would follow, and I reasoned that he would overtake me.

When at midnight he had not come I felt something was wrong. I slept two hours and decided to go to meet him. The thermometer showed 14 below zero. I kept on going, and at 2 in the afternoon, 24 hours after I had sent Scotch back, I paused on a crag and looked below. There in the snowy world of white he lay by the mitten in the snow. He had misunderstood me and had gone back to guard the mitten instead of to get it.

After waiting for him to eat a luncheon we started merrily toward home, where we arrived at 1 o'clock in the morning.

Had I not returned, I suppose Scotch would have died beside the mitten. In a region cold, cheerless, oppressive, without food and perhaps to die, he lay down by the mitten because he understood that I told him to. In the annals of dog heroism I know of no greater deed.

Lingering Belief In Magic.

The man in the country knows better than to offend the occult powers by "cutting them dead," an offence which soon bears its own punishment. In Devonshire to this day, when someone is afflicted with what is known as "a white leg," a bandage is put on the leg, and "the following formula is repeated nine times, each time followed by the Lord's Prayer":

As Jesus Christ was walking He saw the Virgin Mary sitting on a cold marble stone. He said unto her: "If it is a white ill thing, or a red ill thing, or a black ill thing, or a sticking, cracking, pricking, stabbing, bone ill thing, or a sore ill thing, or a swelling ill thing, or a rotten ill thing, or a cold creeping ill thing, or a smarting ill thing—let it fall from thee to the earth in My Name, and in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.—Amen."—Occult Review.

A Prohibited Inscription.

In the west cloister of Westminster Abbey, in the oldest part of the building, imbedded in the pavement is a slab of marble marking the grave of John Broughton, who was a verger in the abbey for more than thirty years and before he obtained the situation was the champion prizefighter of Great Britain, holding the belt for more than twelve years. The guides who show people around the abbey say that when he was buried in the cloister some of his admirers wanted to immortalize him with an appropriate epitaph, and they indicate a blank space under his name which was left for the inscription, "For twelve years champion prizefighter of England," but it was prohibited.—Argonaut.

How It Grew.

Mrs. A (to Mrs. B.)—That Mrs. Newcomer is so fond of children. The other day when I called she was blowing soap bubbles with them through a common clay pipe.

Mrs. B. (to Mrs. C.)—That Mrs. Newcomer is so funny. Mrs. A. saw her amusing the children with a common clay pipe.

Mrs. C. (to Mrs. D.)—That Mrs. Newcomer smokes a common clay pipe.

Mrs. D. (to Mrs. E.)—That Mrs. Newcomer smokes a horrid pipe. I don't see how any woman in her sober senses could do that.

Mrs. E. (to Mrs. F.)—That Mrs. Newcomer smokes a pipe and drinks awfully.—London Scraps.

A Roumanian Custom.

A strange custom is still observed in Roumania. When a servant has displeased his or her master, the offender takes his boots in his hands and places them before the bedroom door of his master. It is a sign of great submission, and the boots are either kicked away as an intimation that the fault will not be forgiven, or else the servant is told to place them on his feet, which shows that he is forgiven.

Cheese In Soup.

Cheese is almost always a nice addition to a soup. Besides being agreeable to the palate, it adds nutriment to the soup if it is not rich in itself, like the tomato and the vegetable soup. Any good yellow cheese can be utilized in this way, even ordinary Canadian cheese. In foreign households clear consomme and other soups are often accompanied by grated Parmesan cheese.

High Sea Therapeutics.

There was an old sea-dog, the captain of a freighter, who used to make the port of Montreal quite often, and who was well known to all the marine reporters as a character. He was a French-Canadian, of the hardy Gulf stock, which takes to the sea by hereditary instinct, and all his family were sailors. A number of stories are told of this man and his career, which dated back to the days of "wind-jammers." He was even in the smuggling business for a while, and they say that once when asked as to the seamanlike qualities of his first mate, a splendid type of young French-Canadian, he answered:

"Is he a good sailor? Why, nom de dieu, he is one of the best what there are—is he not a smuggler?"

But one of the best yarns told of the captain, is his account of the entire futility of the medicine chests required by law on such boats as do not carry a surgeon.

"They are no good," he is reported to have said, "no good for nothing in the world. Last trip one of my men get sick. I look at his disease in the book of directions, and it say give him so much of Number Twelve: I look at bottle Number Twelve, and it is all empty. I therefore take half a dose of Number Seven and half a dose of Number Five, and I mix them. What you think happen then? Why, corbleu, that fellow he is die!"

A Real Sourdough.

During the past week Col. Donald MacGregor, one of the best known of Yukon and British Columbia prospectors, spent a few days in Toronto on his way from Regina, where he has lived for the past year, to his old home in Glengarry County, Ontario. The colonel is a real old-timer. He first went West over fifty years ago, going by way of the Isthmus of Panama. A cousin of his made the biggest strike in the Cariboo district, when gold was first discovered there. This man was afterwards known all over the north and west as Cariboo Cameron, and Mr. MacGregor, then a youth, hearing of his kinsman's success, caught the gold fever, and started out on his remarkable and adventurous career. For many years he was one of the most active men on the Coast, working not only for himself but for the advancement of British Columbia. During the Robson regime he was colonization agent in the province, and founded the Squamish valley settlement, now a thriving community. He was also prominent in organizing a capable militia force on the Coast.

YOUNG WIFE GETS ALL

Toronto Girl Inherits Estate of Great Paris Lawyer--Marriage Was Somewhat Romantic

New York, Oct. 12.—The will of Edmond Kelly, a famous New Yorker, who became the foremost American lawyer in Paris, representing nearly every American litigant who sought justice from French courts of law, discloses that nearly all his large fortune, including the magnificent Kelly home in France, has been left to his youthful wife, formerly Miss Edith Thurresson of Toronto, to whom he was married August 22, four years ago, at the "Little Church Around the Corner" here, by Rev. Dr. Houghton.

The place, with one of the most extensive private libraries in the world, and filled with art treasures in pottery, bric-a-brac, antiques, paintings, etchings, engraving and sculpture, is called Coucy Le Chateau. It is very near Paris and is noted as a great show place, with extensive grounds, meadows and gardens.

His American home in this city and also at Nyack on the Hudson, contains over a hundred thousand volumes, which goes with the rest of the estate to his widow, after other bequests are paid. His income was over $100,000 a year. His fortune was invested in securities, largely American railroads.

DAMMING OTTAWA RIVER TO CONSERVE THE WATERS

Ottawa, Ont., Oct. 12.—Regarding the development of the waterpowers within reach of Ottawa, and the plans which are in progress for the conservation of the water supply in the upper reaches of the Ottawa for gradual distribution during the dry season, it is stated by the Public Works Department that the big dam at the lower end of Lake Temiskaming is in progress of construction, but cannot be completed before the end of next year, and possibly not even then. It is also proposed to dam Kippewa Lake, whose outlet, the Kippewa River, drains the lake into Lake Temiskaming. The plans are ready, but the contract has not been let yet.

Another huge dam is to be erected on the Quinze River at the foot of the Quinze Lake. This is the chief source of supply to Lake Temiskaming. However, the plans for this are not yet ready. The whole system, when completed, will provide the most important waterpower so far developed in Canada.

MOBILIZATION DEPARTMENT

London, Oct. 12.—As a result of the recent Government enquiry into questions of naval policy raised by Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, the Admiralty has issued an announcement of the creation of a new department, entitled the naval mobilization department.

This will form, with the existing intelligence branch, a permanent navy war council for the study for strategy and the working out of war plans.

Vice-Admiral George Fowler King-Hall has been appointed director of the new department.

RIVERS-WILSON WILL QUIT G.T.R.

Hayes and Smithers Will be in Charge in Future

London, Oct. 12.—It is understood on good authority that the re-arrangement of the Grand Trunk directorate is practically settled, and Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson retires from the presidency.

Suggestions were pressed on the board that, seeing the recent course of Grand Trunk finances and the exceptionally heavy demands on British investors, the presidency should remain with an Englishman of acknowledged prominence, selected from outside the present board room.

Out of the discussions arose the proposal that the Grand Trunk follow the Canadian Pacific example, to the extent of securing a sort of dual control through the president and chairman, one of whom would be in England, and the other in Canada. Mr. Hays and Mr. Smithers, now vice-president of the Grand Trunk, are named as occupants of these two positions.

SAYS WESTERN FARMERS WILL HAVE TO CHANGE METHODS

Montreal, Oct. 12.—F. W. Thompson, vice-president of the Lake of the Woods Milling Co., arrived yesterday from the west, and says that his former crop estimate of 115,000,000 bushels will be fully maintained, and that 30,000,000 have already been delivered at the elevators.

Only the very best weather saved millions of bushels from ruin, and farmers will certainly have to modify their farming methods and go in more for mixed farming, as it will be quite impossible to secure adequate help. By mixed farming, they will be able to keep their help all the year round.

There is no such a thing as scarcity of cars, and everything is going like clock work. Mr. Thompson says that there will be another large city somewhere in the middle west, viz., between Winnipeg and the Rockies, and wherever the Ogilvie Co. decide that city is to be located, there they will build their big additional elevator.

VALUABLE PAPERS HAVE BEEN LOST

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 12.—Valuable accounts in connection with the summer's work of the joint boundary survey of the Alaska boundary by Canada and the United States, were lost last Monday by H. Fred Lambert, who is in charge for the Canadian Government. The papers represent expenditures of thirty thousand dollars and the loss is serious to Lambert, as without them he cannot report on his summer's expenses.

CADETS SUING COLLIERS' WEEKLY

Annapolis, Oct. 12.—George Hiram Mann, attorney for Lieut. Hilary Williams, U.S.N., and the members of the Naval Academy rifle team at Camp Perry, who were in charge of Lieut. Williams, were in Annapolis yesterday, and stated that suits against Collier's Weekly aggregating $175,000 would be laid in New York to-day.

The suits will allege that Collier's accused the plaintiff with fraud and dishonesty in the national rifle matches. The alleged damage of Lt. Williams will be placed at $25,000, and those of each of the fifteen members of the team who retained Mr. Mann will be placed at $10,000.

PLACES HEALTH ABOVE LEARNING

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 12.—Miss Elizabeth Wright, physical instructor at Radcliffe College, has decided views as to allowing delicate young women or those who will not take gymnasium work to matriculate. She believes that a perfectly healthy body should take precedence over a perfectly moulded brain.

A young woman unequippel with health, she says, has lost one of her most valuable weapons with which to fight the world, and one who will not seek physical perfection is an object of pity.

Miss Wright advocates that physical training stand high among the list of studies and that a high mark in this branch be made compulsory.

HAVE BEARS TO HAUL SLEDGES

Hamburg, Oct. 12.—Capt. Roald Amundsen, the well-known Danish explorer, who is about to start on a polar expedition, has decided to try a remarkable innovation in the use of draught animals for polar travel. He will endeavor to make polar bears draw his sledges.

Some time ago Amundsen made a contract with Carl Hagenback, the famous animal trainer, for twenty ice bears, three years old. Hagenback's men have been training the bears.

ACCOMPLISHED YOUNG PIANIST WILL STUDY IN GERMANY

Miss Gladys Seward, Peterborough's accomplished young pianist, will leave to-morrow for New York, from where she will sail for Dresden, Germany, to study piano under Mr. Harry Field, the eminent Canadian master, now at Dresden. Miss Seward will be joined at Hamilton by her brother, Mr. Arthur Seward, who will accompany her as far as New York. At New York she will be met by Mrs. Harold Jarvis, who will leave with her for Germany on Friday or Saturday.

Miss Seward is a pupil of Mrs. Alice Roger Collins and has made most encouraging progress and shown great talent and aptitude. She is a daughter of that gifted musician, the late Louis Seward, of this city, and her friends predict a splendid future for the brilliant young artist.

WHY NO PROVISION IS MADE FOR SMALLPOX PATIENTS

No provision has been made in the plans of the proposed isolation hospital for accommodating smallpox patients. This has caused some comment, and one of the aldermen asked last night at the Council meeting how it was that there was no provision for smallpox patients. In answering the question Dr. McPherson, M. H. O., stated that it would not do to have smallpox patients in the same building as other contagious diseases. The average person had such a dread of smallpox that no children suffering from diphtheria or scarlet fever would be sent to the hospital if there were smallpox patients there. As a matter of fact smallpox was no worse than the other diseases but some attention had to be paid to the way the public looked at the matter.

OFFICERS OF LITERARY SOCIETY OF NORMAL SCHOOL

The students of the Normal School met yesterday afternoon and elected officers for the Literary Society in connection with the institution. This society was an important and successful feature of last term's work, and no doubt the newly-elected officers for this year will endeavor to make the society interesting for their fellow-students and of benefit to the general public, who will be given the opportunity to attend on different occasions.

The officers elected were as follows:—

PREFERS DEATH TO THE ASYLUM

Toronto, Oct. 12.—With the papers of his committal to an asylum as a lunatic complete, and under a continual watch to avoid just such an act, Harry J. Orpen, for years a familiar figure down town, shot himself in his rooms at 773 West King street yesterday morning.

George S. Orpen, his brother, who was sleeping in the next room, heard the shot and rushed to find the man lying upon the floor before his mirror with a bullet hole in his left temple just over the eye. Dr. John Eadie, 899 West Queen street, was called, but could do nothing.

ENTER PROTEST AGAINST POLITICS IN THE CHURCH

New York, Oct. 12.—"As a Christian gentleman, a son of a Presbyterian doctor of divinity, and a grandson of a Presbyterian doctor of divinity, I protest against bringing dirty politics into the pulpit of this or any other church."

So saying, John B. A. Mullally, a Tammany candidate for the assembly rose to his feet Sunday and walked out of the Manhattan Congregational Church, from the pulpit of which Otto T. Bannard, Republican candidate for mayor, and John Purroy Mitchell, Republican candidate for president of the board of aldermen, had just delivered campaign addresses.

It caused a roar as it fell and sent a spray two or three hundred feet. The stream continued falling for nearly fifteen minutes. Later four similar falls were sighted in different directions. They are supposed to be due to a cloudburst.

SENTENCE IS UPHELD, BUT CASE IS CARRIED HIGHER

New York Capitalist Who Misapplied the Funds of a National Bank is Put in Better Position to Avoid His 15-Year Sentence by Court's Decision.

New York, Oct. 12.—Fifteen years at hard labor in a federal prison came one legal stage nearer Charles W. Morse, the capitalist, yesterday when the United States Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the lower federal courts in sentencing the banker to such a penalty for misapplying the funds of a national bank.

Morse surrendered himself, and his attorneys immediately began steps to carry his case to the Supreme Court of the United States and to secure a continuation of his bail bond pending further argument.

While the court yesterday did not lighten the sentence which Morse has been striving to annul, its decision was not entirely adverse because it sustained only ten of the 53 counts on which he was convicted by a jury. This, say his attorneys, will leave a means of approach to the court of last resort, and an application for a writ of certiorari to review the case will be made on Oct. 18, in Washington.

The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday afternoon granted a stay of forty days in the execution of the sentence upon Morse.

Morse was convicted of violating the national banking laws in misapplying the funds of the National Bank of North America, of which he was president, at the time of the last financial panic. He was charged with making false entries on the bank's books. He was sentenced on Nov. 8, 1908, after a long jury trial.

After his original sentence Morse obtained a writ of error and his case in review was argued before the Circuit Court of Appeals for review. On June 17, judges reserved decision, admitted to $125,000 bail, and Morse was released from the Tombs, where he had been confined since October, 1908.

Immediately he plunged into business as if a long prison term were not hanging over him, and during the past four months his financial rehabitulation was rapid. During that time he is reported to have paid off $5,000,000 of his $7,000,000 indebtedness, and to have regained control of a large part of his extensive steamship interests.

COUNTY CONSTABLE HAS BEEN CHARGED WITH MALFEASANCE

Brockville, Oct. 12.—Malfeasance of office was the charge preferred yesterday against George H. Howard, a county constable residing at Elgin.

The accusation arises out of the prosecution of an American, A. P. Haldane, for refusing to show his fishing license to Fishery Overseer John McGuire of Chaffey's Locks. A fine of $5 and costs was imposed on Haldane. Howard told McGuire on the way home from Chaffey's Locks that he had forgotten to include some items in the bill of costs, and McGuire received only $3.40 to return to the department. The overseer made a full report of the affair, which to him was very unsatisfactory.

After an investigation by the department, Howard was arraigned here before Judge McDonald, who reprimanded the constable and gave him the option of resigning his commission forthwith or taking the consequences of a trial. Howard promptly resigned.

HE MAY BE THE TRURO ROBBER

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 12.—One of the robbers who at noon May 19 entered the office of the Canadian Express Co. in Truro, N.S., and with a revolver compelled the clerks to deliver cash and money orders amounting to about $9,000, is believed to be safely behind the bars here in the person of W. L. Burgess, a real estate speculator of 636 Pender street.

Burgess arrived several weeks ago and cut a wide swath, spending money like water. This aroused the suspicion of Supt. Walsh of the Canadian Detective Bureau. In the meantime 13 stolen money orders, each of $50, were received by the express company after being cashed in this city, and still a closer surveillance was kept on the suspect in an endeavor to secure a copy of his handwriting. Finally a detective bandaged his right hand and talked over with Burgess a real estate deal, and Burgess was prevailed upon to write his name and address. The writing appears identical.

HAMILTON POLICE TAKE NO STOCK IN CONFESSION STORY

Hamilton, Oct. 12.—The police take no stock in an alleged confession by one Edward William Bedford, in London, Eng., that he was the murderer of Ethel Kinrade. They think that he is playing a game to get free transportation to Canada, or else that he is insane. They have had no communication from London with reference to the case.

The announcement came in a special cable to a Montreal paper, saying: "Edward William Bedford gave himself up to the police here yesterday on his confession that he had murdered Ethel Kinrade by shooting at Hamilton, Ont., last February, at the instigation of another man, whose name he has forgotten, but who gave him $500."

THE FRANCE OF TO-DAY

The French blame the revolution for its present still stand in population. The wars during and succeeding it killed off the young men. Then the change in the law of succession to property upon the death of the owner, left those who would have succeeded, without anything to succeed to. Hence the raising of families as a part of French domestic probity became an affair of the past. In a word, when the object of having a family disappears the family disappears with it. Hence it is said by French investigators that there is no possible remedy for the present condition of affairs, but a change back to the old laws of succession to land and property generally. This is an odd result of "wise and statewards" legislation. It shows that the family tie is superior to that of the state and that state-socialism may result in an unexpected way. The farther men stray from the natural growth of communities and from the simple virtues of life the more they reduce life itself and all that it implies to the "dull dead level" of French indifference. It is a matter for serious consideration.

KING EDWARD AT HIS CLUB

When Edward VII. was a young man he was a great clubman. Desiring to have some club whose membership should be select and where he would meet only those whom he cared to know intimately, he brought about the founding of the Marlborough Club in Pall Mall in 1869. Of the original members of this club, three survive, the King, the Duke of Fife and Lord Farquhar. To this day all new members must be personally acceptable to His Majesty. In an article in Cassell's Saturday Journal, London, we read the following account of the King's club life:—

Even during the strain of a London season, with his many public duties, the King finds time to run into his favorite club for an hour or two's rest and quietness. No particular ceremony marks either his entry or his exit. The attendant at the door swings it open as his Majesty's private motor car or brougham draws up in much the same fashion that he would for any other member. There is, however, one interesting exception. By special desire of the King the attendants at the Marlborough Club, as far as possible, are either ex-soldiers or sailors. It is impossible for them to forget that they have worn his Majesty's uniform and sworn allegiance to him. Therefore, they come to the salute as he passes them.

As far as the other members of the club are concerned it is well understood that when his Majesty enters the building, he desires, and even expects, to be treated in purely a private capacity. His favorite seat is rather near the fireplace in the smoking-room with his back toward the window. Therefore, anyone occupying this seat at once vacates it, with a bow to the King, and finds a chair somewhere else. The members present, too, all rise in their seats when the King enters the room, but this is a formality that is quickly over, since with a bow and a smile the King, with a wave of his hand intimates his desire that they should all resume their seats and tacitly ignore his presence.

Another unwritten law of the Marlborough Club is that no member must directly address the King without first being spoken to by him. This is a rule that may be infringed by only one member of the club, the Duke of Fife. As son-in-law to the King, of course, the Duke stands in a unique position. The King, however, desires company when he visits the club, and after he has glanced through the evening papers he will get up and stroll around the rooms, exchanging a cheery word here and there with such of his friends as he chooses to recognize. The one subject that is taboo to all in the King's presence is that of politics. The political situation neither at home nor abroad may be be mentioned while his Majesty is in the room.

Though, as has been said, his Majesty when visiting the club expects his incognito to be strictly observed, he is keen to resent anything in the nature of undue familiarity. A rather well known peer discovered this to his cost a few years ago. Presuming upon a friendly conversation he had just had with the King he called across the room to him, "Just ring the bell behind you, will you please, sir!" The Prince of Wales, as he then was, looked at him for a moment and then rang the bell. The waiter entered, and the Prince said to him in a voice that could be heard all over the room, "Please call Lord ——'s carriage." The Peer took the hint and left the club. The following morning he had a polite note from the secretary intimating that the committee would be extremely obliged if he would consider his membership terminated, and would not make use of the club for the future.

As a general rule it is late in the evening before his Majesty can reach his club, and then he chiefly desires a rubber of bridge with some of his old friends. The King is an extremely good player, and greatly dislikes having a duffer at his table. Every member in the card-room who pays anything of a decent game is aware that he may be summoned to take a hand at the Royal table, and no matter how interesting the game in which he is then engaged in may be, he must be prepared to relinquish it cheerfully and to obey the command to join the Royal table. Further, he must be prepared to make agreeable "small talk" between the games, since the King desires to be entertained as well as to play cards.—Literary Digest.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Globe of Monday contained a headline despatch from Peterborough to the effect that Mr. Dumble, the Police Magistrate, had said that not one but all the election crooks should be brought to justice.

An effort might well be made by our progressive Art Association to secure Antonie Stotle, the noted German reproducer of great paintings, for a lecture with slides. She is being much feted in Ottawa. Her lectures are expensive affairs, but are said to be well worth the money.

Our Ottawa contemporary is indulging in the not altogether profitable occupation of doing its family laundering in public, but it is nevertheless performing a public service in directing attention to the manner in which the "protest" business is handled for partisan ends rather than the interests of public morality.—Brantford Expositor (Liberal.)

WHAT NEGLECT DID FOR HIM

Jas. E. Grant Suffered Torments From Kidney Disease

Then He Used Dodd's Kidney Pills and Became a Well Man—His Experience a Lesson to You

Athabasca Landing, Alta., Oct. 11. (Special)—That Kidney Disease neglected in its earlier stages, leads to the most terrible suffering, if not death itself, and that the one sure cure for it in all stages is Dodd's Kidney Pills, is the experience of Mr. James F. Brant, a farmer residing near here.

Mr. Brant contracted Kidney Disease, when a young man, from a strain, and, like hosts of others, neglected it, expecting it to go away itself.

But it kept gradually growing worse, till after thirty years of increasing suffering the climax came, and he found himself so crippled that at times he could not turn in bed, and for two weeks at a time it was impossible for him to rise from a chair without putting his hands on his knees.

He could not button his clothes. He was troubled with Lumbago, Gravel and Backache, and tried medicines for each and all of them without getting relief, till good luck turned him to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Dodd's Kidney Pills started at the cause of his troubles and cured his Kidneys. With cured Kidneys his other troubles speedily disappeared, and to-day he is a well man.

If you cure your Kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills you will never have Lumbago, Rheumatism, Heart Disease, Dropsy, or Bright's Disease.

JURORS' FEES INCREASED

Jurymen Will Receive $2.50 per Day—Mileage Rates Advanced to Thirteen Cents a Mile

Sheriff Hall has received notification that the Ontario Government has raised the fees of jurors from the present rate of $2 per day to $2.50. The mileage rates have also been advanced to thirteen cents per mile; this being an increase of three cents. The new scale of rates will go into effect at once. Those in this county who will receive the first benefit of this advance will sit on the jury which will be empanelled for the opening of the Fall Assizes on October 18th.

They Keep The Brakes Set

And So Can Never Do Their Best

Many men, and more women, go through life like a train with the engine tugging, but the brakes hard on. They never get anywhere near top speed, because they are never really well.

Probably they do not own even to themselves that they are sick, but they scarcely known what it is to really "feel good". Always there is Headache, or that "dragged out feeling" which makes good work, either mental or physical, utterly impossible.

The most common trouble with all these people is that they have Constipation. Their systems are poisoned with the waste matter, which stays in the blood, instead of being promptly removed by the bowels. Harsh purgatives are worse than no treatment at all, because they weaken and irritate the bowels, instead of curing the trouble.

"Fruit-a-tives" combines the well-known laxative principles of apples, oranges, figs and prunes. So perfect is the combination, that "Fruit-a-tives" acts like the fresh fruit, by stimulating the sluggish liver to supply the proper amount of bile to move the bowels regularly.

The most stubborn cases of Constipation promptly yield to the curative and corrective effects of "Fruit-a-tives".

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25c.—at dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Autumn in the Country

Chicago Evening Post.

What do town folks know of fields
Bare and brown beside the road,
Dreaming of their summer yields,
While the crickets chant an ode
And soft-footed twilight creeps
Down the hills and through the wood
Until the whole world sleeps
Knowing that its work is good!

How many they that dwell in streets
Akin to the lanes and brooks
Know the cases the world repeats—
Tales untold in printed books!
How many folk shut in by walls
Sense the wonder-stories flung
Through the day in mystic calls
That the autumn breeze gives tongue!

How many they that have no shade,
Save that of the brick and stone,
Know of the shadow pictures made
When the orchard leaves are blown!
How many they know of the giant
Of the apples through the leaves,
Blending green and ruddy tint
Into oriental weaves!

And the old grape-arbors where
The besotted bees are found
Lurching drunken here and there,
Honeyward or hiveward bound:
Yes, and meadows lush with gold
That is freckled by the sod—
Minted in the yellow mound
Of the swaying golden-rod!

What do town-folk know of this!
Do they know the hush that comes
At the dusk, and do they miss
The dual note the beetle thrums!
No, the countryside in fall
Has a charm no pen can tell—
From the trees and fields and all
Comes the word that all is well.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by Druggists. Price, 75c. per bottle.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

Availability.

A nobleman was once showing a friend a rare collection of precious stones which he had gathered at a great expense and enormous amount of labor. "And yet," he said, "they yield me no income."

His friend replied, "Come with me, and I will show you two stones which cost me but $25 each, yet they yield me a considerable income." He took the owner of the gems to his gristmill and pointed to two gray millstones which were always busy grinding out grist.

Wild Apples.

In the Sandwich Islands the apple has become wild, and whole forests of trees, many acres in extent, are found in various parts of the country. They extend from the level of the sea far up into the mountain sides. It is said that miles of these apple forests can occasionally be seen, and very beautiful they are, both when in flower and in fruit.

LONDON, Oct. 11.—London cables for cattle are lower, at 12c to 13½c per lb. for Canadian steers, dressed weight; refrigerator beef is quoted at 11¼c to 11½c per lb.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, Oct. 11.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 61 carloads, consisting of 1207 cattle, 2 hogs, 456 sheep and lambs and 21 calves.

Exporters.

There was nothing doing in the export class. All cattle that were good enough, including buchers' heifers of good quality, were being held for Tuesday's market, when the export dealers will be on deck.

Butchers.

There were few prime picked butchers' cattle on sale, and they were being held over for Tuesday's market. The best cattle in the butchers' class sold to-day went around $4.90 to $5.05; medium at $4.50 to $4.75; common, $3.50 to $4.25; cows, $2.50 to $4.20; canners, $1.50 to $2.

Stockers and Feeders.

There was considerable trade in feeders. Halligan & Lunness got six loads of northwest feeders and one load of Ontario feeders; steers, 1000 to 1100 lbs., at $4 to $4.25, and bulls at $2.75 to $3.25. Whaley & Coughlin received four loads of Manitoba feeders, which they sold at $4.20, $4.25, $4.65, $4.80, and one lot of rough, 1200-lb. cattle, at $3.65 per cwt.

Milkers and Springers.

The number of cows coming to this market is increasing. About twenty of fine milkers and springers, with excellent milking qualities, sold at prices ranging all the way from $41 to $70 each, but there was not a common quality cow in the whole lot, which were readily bought up.

Veal Calves.

Gunns, Limited, bought the five best veal calves at $7 per cwt. from S. H. Reynolds of Bothwell, but they were new, milk-fed. The rest of the calves offered sold at $3 to $6.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Upwards of 500 sheep and lambs were on sale. Trade for them was about steady at last week's prices. Export ewes, $3.60 to $3.90; rams, $2.50 to $2.75 per cwt.; lambs, $5.25 to $5.85, with a selected lot at $5.90.

Hogs.

Only two lone hogs were on sale to-day. Dealers are quoting prices down, at $7.75 for hogs fed and watered at the market, and $7.50 f.o.b. cars at country points.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Oct. 11.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Oct. 9 were 2126 cattle, 2550 sheep and lambs, 2775 hogs and 650 calves. The offerings this morning consisted of 1000 cattle, 2000 sheep and lambs, 1475 hogs and 450 calves. There was no further change in the condition of the market for cattle since last Wednesday, prices being about steady. Supplies were heavy, which consisted largely of Manitoba and northwest ranch stock, and, as the average quality was good, holders had no difficulty in disposing of them. The weather was fine and somewhat cooler than it has been of late, consequently the gathering of buyers was large, including several from Ottawa and Quebec, and, as they all required stock, the demand was good, and an active trade was done. Cable advices from Liverpool were stronger and noted advance in prices of ⅛c to ¼c per lb., but at the same time they reported trade slow in spite of good weather. There was no demand from exporters here, as they had sufficient stock coming on hand and coming forward to fill their freight engagements. Sales of choice northwest ranch steers were made at 4¾c to 5c; good at 4¼c to 4½c; fair at 3¾c to 4c, medium at 3¼c to 3½c; good bulls at 3¼c to 3⅜c per lb.; canning bulls at $2.65 to $3, and cows at $1.50 to $1.65 per 100 lbs. A feature of the market for small meats was the stronger feeling in sheep and lambs. Prices show an advance of ⅛c per lb. as compared with those realized on Wednesday last. The offerings were fairly large, for which the demand was keen from local buyers, and sales of lambs were made at 5⅛c to 5¼c, and sheep at 3⅝c to 3¾c per lb. Calves continue to come forward in fairly large numbers for the season, and meet with a ready sale at prices ranging from $3 to $12 each, as to size and quality. Owing to increased supplies of hogs this morning, a weaker feeling developed in the market, and prices scored a sharp decline of 50c to 60c per 100 lbs., and even at this reduction the demand from packers was not keen, as some of them had ample supplies on hand, and fully expected lower prices later in the week. Trade was slow, with sales of selected lots at $8.50 to $8.65 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, Oct. 11.—Cattle—Receipts, 5200 head; slow; good steady; common 10c to 25c lower; prime steers, $6.75 to $7; shipping, $6 to $6.65; butchers, $4.75 to $6.40; heifers, $3.65 to $5.75; cows, $2.50 to $5; bulls, $2.75 to $5; stockers and feeders, $3.50 to $4.75; stock heifers, $3.25 to $3.50; fresh cows and springers slow and $2 to $3 lower, $25 to $65.

Veals—Receipts, 1000 head; active and steady, $6 to $9.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 16,000 head; fairly active and about steady; heavy, $8.20 to $8.25; mixed, $8.10 to $8.20; yorkers, $7.50 to $8.10; pigs, $6.75 to $7.40; roughs, $7.15 to $7.35; stags, $6 to $6.50; dairies and greasers, $7.75 to $8.10.

VICTORIA COUNTY PIONEER TELLS ABOUT 1837 REBELLION

An aged Victoria county pioneer, who was one of the followers of William Lyon Mackenzie in 1837, contending for responsible government, has given the following interesting recollections of those stirring times:

Well do I remember the winter of 1837. The month of February was very cold. On the 27th day of that month the word came for the reformers to hasten to the meeting place. I had little faith in the movement myself, but nevertheless, I decided to go. I went to a neighbor's house after nightfall, and took a team of horses, hitched them to his own sleigh, gathered a few men together and started in the night. After travelling for several hours word came along the line for us to return to our homes—that the proposed gathering had been abandoned. We hurried back, and reached home about daybreak. The following morning I went home to my wife and was told that the red coats were after me and that I had better seek a hiding place, which I did for several days in an old mill up the river. I then started on foot for Picton, where I had a sister living. Here I heard a reward of $1,000 was offered for my arrest, and the militia was scouring the country in every direction in search of me. I again took to the woods, and dare not venture in the open fields, and I was determined not to be taken by force. I fled to Kingston in this way by moonlight, hoping to be able to get across the Cape, but every avenue of escape I found securely guarded, and I had to retrace my steps through the deep snow to Picton. On the way I was often forced to crouch behind trees to avoid being detected by the volunteers that were riding up and down the road. I entered Picton by night, and had scarcely reached my sister when I heard the soldiers outside. My brother-in-law came out with me and we hurried again to the woods to begin a weary march to the lake, where we hoped to be able to board a schooner and sail for the States. We plodded as far as the southern shore on Rice Lake, north of Cobourg, where my brother-in-law had a brother living in the woods. When we reached there we were completely exhausted for want of food and rest.

For three days I was totally blind and to guard against being captured secreted myself in the hay mow several feet from the top to escape the points of the bayonets which were thrust in to detect the rebels. I remained in this position three days and three nights without food or drink, and of course I could not see any light. When I came out of my hiding place I was completely rested, my sight was restored, and I felt like a new man. I then set out alone in the direction of Toronto, travelling about sixty miles, but I could find no means of getting across the lake. I started back then towards Rice Lake.

I soon learned that a schooner was coming from Rochester and would be at Cobourg at the disposal of the rebels in a few days. This was the glad tidings for me. I had been tramping through the woods for five weeks and I was glad to get away. In the meantime the boat had arrived and in the evening by a signal given at eleven o'clock, we all started in a body and boarded the schooner. When I got to Rochester I had $330. I reached a village called Lyons. I stopped there for three years, received my pardon and came back.—Lindsay Warder.

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

Scab in Sheep.

Symptoms of scab in sheep are intense itching, aggravated by warm weather; the loss of wool in patches; the unnatural dryness of the skin, which cracks at times; rapid loss of flesh and general unthriftiness. A veterinarian says: The following dip is excellent and does not stain the wool: Tobacco, sixteen pounds; oil of tar, three pints; soda ash, twenty pounds; soft soap, four pounds. Boil the tobacco and dissolve the other ingredients in a few gallons of boiling water and add enough water to make fifty gallons. Dip the sheep in it while lukewarm. This mixture should dip fifty sheep if each when taken out is laid on a drain board and his wool well squeezed. It will be necessary to dip a second or even a third time in persistent cases.

The Difference.

The difference between good stock and scrub stock is the difference between the animal which is adapted to a particular purpose and the one which is not. This is why the pure bred animal is ordinarily so much superior to the mongrel. The one has inherited tendencies, the result of generations of selected ancestry, to develop a certain form or certain qualities; the other has inherited in varying degrees so many conflicting lines of blood that there is no special fitness for any particular purpose.—Progressive Farmer.

Parasites on Sheep.

Some writers claim that sheep ought not to be pastured on land more than one year before it is plowed and reseeded, owing to parasites, but it has been shown that sheep have been kept free from parasites by the use of tar, turpentine and salt. Sheep soon learn to eat tar. One sheep raiser keeps it, mixed with turpentine and salt, where it is accessible at all times. About one-half pint of turpentine to one peck of salt is the proportion.

Iced Bouillon.

Beef extract made quick iced bouillon at an impromptu luncheon the other day. Three cupfuls of hot water were flavored to taste with the extract, it was seasoned with salt and pepper, and a level tablespoonful of gelatin soaked soft in cold water was added, and when it was dissolved a tablespoonful of lemon juice was turned in and the bouillon was put on the ice. When served it was whipped with a fork until the jelly was in flakes and put into bouillon cups.

THE OLD PIRATES.

They Were Cowards, Pilferers and Traitors to One Another.

The average pirate does not deserve his romantic reputation, even for ferocity. Pirates were brutes unquestionably and, like Captain Kidd when on the coast of Malabar, would exercise a "pretty severity" in order to extort confessions from prisoners whom they suspected of hiding goods. But the universal application of the maxim that dead men tell no tales and the dispatch of all prisoners "by the plank" were not practices of theirs. It was only at the end and when the last pirates, the broken men of the Napoleonic wars, were fighting their last fight on the south coast of Cuba that desperation made them utterly merciless. And when we say fight the word must be understood with a difference. The pirates were out "on the plundering account," and they rarely made a serious fight. Indeed, the essential cowardice of mankind is nowhere more visible than among these oppressors of unarmed traders and black villagers. Men who must have known that surrender would infallibly take them straight to the gallows laid down their arms to any decently appointed force without a blow. Every man hoped that he would save his neck, whatever happened to the others. At the worst they put off the evil hour.

Two of Avery's crew who were condemned to death petitioned that if they must be hanged they might at least be sent "to suffer in India." They may have hoped for escape on the way, but even if they were unable to get off it was better to be sent to die some months hence in India than to go to Execution dock to-morrow. They clung to their miserable lives to the last moment. Stevenson's pirates—cowards, pilferers, traitors to one another—in "The Master of Ballantrae" are the real men as they were. The pirates of "Treasure Island" are boys' book pirates. They are excellent of their kind, and Stevenson produced them with pleasure, but nobody knew better than he that they were but fantoches. A parent who found his boy becoming too fond of pirate stories might do worse than put the right volumes of state trials into his hands, and, if he could only obtain a copy, then also the broadside which contains "a full and true Discovery of all the Robberies, Pyracies and other notorious actions of that famous English Pyrate, Captain James Kelly, who was executed on Friday, 12th of July, 1700." The discovery purports to be a confession by the captain and shows abundant signs of being, in fact, taken down from his mouth by a copyist who heard him ill and reports him with grotesque misspellings.—David Hannay, in Blackwood's Magazine.

Paid His Debt.

When Joe Chamberlain entered the House of Commons he was anxious to try his oratorical powers. A certain leading politician who was piloting a bill through the House was approached by one of Mr. Chamberlain's friends, who said:

"Chamberlain would like to speak on the bill. Can you give him a chance?"

"Well, you know, I think it would not do. He's a new member, and nobody knows what the dickens he might say."

Time went on. Chamberlain gained ground—became a power in Parliament. The leading politician, on the contrary, had made a series of blunders which had imperiled his position. An election was imminent. Forgetting his previous record, he thought that if he could get Mr. Chamberlain to speak for him he would strengthen his position. He therefore applied to the right honorable gentleman. The latter calmly surveyed him through his eyeglass and said:

"Well, you know, I think it would not do. I am a new member, and nobody knows what the dickens I might say."

South Sea Swells.

Readers of old narratives of exploration in the south seas will recall the frequent references to the heavy swells of the ocean, which impressed the navigators with the idea of their remoteness from land. Dr. Vaughan Cornish explains the great size of the sea waves in high southern latitudes by the fact that south of the Cape of Good Hope and Cape Horn there is neither windward nor leeward shore and the prevailing wind in all longitudes is westerly. Thus when a west wind springs up it finds a long westerly swell, the effect of a previous wind, still running. The newborn wind increases the steepness of this swell and so forms majestic storm waves, which sometimes attain a length of 1,200 feet from crest to crest. The average height attained by sea waves in feet is about half the velocity of the wind in miles per hour.

His Order.

"Does your husband belong to any clubs, Mrs. Dubbley?"

"None but the Knights of Mystic Stairway."

"The Mystic Stairway? I never heard of that order."

"You're lucky. The members are pledged to assist the brother who needs help to reach home and to carry him upstairs, provided they are able to trust themselves on stairs that go round and round, and after that to try to make his wife believe that he was seized with sudden illness and that they administered an overdose of brandy or something of the kind for the purpose of reviving him."

If She Had Not Married.

The lover of euphonious female names must look back with regret to the eighteenth century, with its fragrant memories of Belinda, Arabella and Anabel. Yet in Spain euphony is still preserved. Could you have a more beautiful name than Juana Maria de los Dolores de Leon? It is one of the ironies of history that the owner of these charming vocables was fated to be known in after life as Lady Smith and to bestow that much less attractive and euphonious title upon a town in South Africa.—London Chronicle.

Harry Benson, of Boston, was sentenced in England to five years for fraud.

THE FARMERS' OPPORTUNITY

Splendid Opportunity to Supplement Regular Revenue From the Farm

A splendid opportunity to supplement the regular revenue of the farm is offered to those who can compete for the large cash prizes which will be given at the Ontario Provincial Winter Fair, to be held in Guelph on December 6th to 10th, 1909. About $14,000.00 will be offered as prize money in the different departments, which include the principal breeds of horses, dairy cattle, beef cattle, sheep, swine and poultry, and also seeds. The Fair comes at a convenient season when the fitting can be done during the slack time of fall and early winter, while the few days spent in Guelph with the exhibits is a pleasant and profitable outing.

During the past summer about $50,000.00 was spent on an addition to the Fair Building. Besides providing increased and improved accommodation for the former departments of the Fair, a large judging arena and about one hundred and fifty horse stalls have been placed in the new part which give splendid facilities for a horse show. Special attention has been given to providing accommodation for the judging of the different classes of stock, and besides the ring for horses and beef cattle, there are now separate judging rings for swine and sheep, each with adequate seating.

The following is a brief summary of the prize list. Our readers who are interested should apply to the secretary of the Fair, A. P. Westervelt, Toronto, for a complete list;—In the horse department there are classes for Clydesdales, Shires, Hackneys, Standard breeds, Thoroughbreds Ponies and Heavy Draught Horses, for which there is offered $3,300.00 in prizes. The $2,000.00 offered for beef cattle goes to Shorthorns, Herefords, Aberdeen-Angus, Galloways, Devons and Grades, or Crosses. The Dairy Shorthorns, Ayrshires, Holsteins, Jerseys, Guernseys and Grades compete for $1,200.00. Exhibitors of sheep can show Cotswolds, Lincolns, Leicesters, Suffolks, and Grades or Crosses and win $2,000.00 in prizes. The swine exhibitors get $1,400 for their exhibit of Yorkshires, Berkshires, Tamworths, Grades, or Crosses and Bacon Hogs. As pure seed is now recognized as necessary to successful farming, growers of these are now offered $900.00 as an inducement for them to make a good display. The poultry department has grown to be the biggest poultry show in Canada, and breeders show great enthusiasm in competing for the $3,000.00 prize money.

We look to the farmers of this county to uphold their reputation as successful breeders and feeders of good live stock. The financial inducements offered are certainly worthy of their best efforts.

WHY SUFFER FROM PILES

Nature's Remedy is Zam-Buk

Impressive Cures of Women Sufferers

Wherever there is suffering from piles Zam-Buk should be applied! There are lots of reasons for this, but one of the best is that in practically all cases of piles where the use of Zam-Buk is persevered with complete cure—not merely relief—is the result.

Mrs. Wm. Hughes, of 253 Hochelaga street, Hochelaga, Montreal, says:—"I suffered from blind, itching and protruding piles for years. Sometimes they were so bad that I could hardly bear to move about. The inflammation, the burning, smarting pain, the throbbing, the aching, the overpowering feelings of dullness and dark despair which this ailment brings, the shooting spasms of agony—all were so terrible that only sufferers from this awful ailment can understand!"

Bad as this case was Zam-Buk triumphed, and Mrs. Hughes suffers no longer. It only needed a little perseverance with Zam-Buk, and in the end complete cure resulted.

Mrs. E. Boxall, of Scott street, St. Thomas, says:—"For months without cessation I endured great pain from bleeding piles. For as many months I tried everything which I thought would give me ease, but in the end, dispirited and still suffering, I gave in."

Then it was she heard of Zam-Buk, and she adds:—"Although I feared Zam-Buk would be like the ordinary remedies—useless—I am glad it was not. It soon proved itself to be very different. It rapidly gave me relief, and after a time cured me completely. I would like to let all sufferers from piles know what a grand thing Zam-Buk is."

Mr. F. Astridge, 3 St. Paul street, St. Catharines, says:—"For five years I suffered untold agony from piles. At times the pain was so bad I could have screamed aloud. On a friend's advice I tried a box of Zam-Buk. It gave me considerable ease, and I persevered with the treatment until I was cured. I wish I could convince every sufferer from piles of the value of this great herbal balm."

So one could go on, quoting case after case, and it is by working such cures that Zam-Buk has earned for itself its great reputation.

Now, if you suffer from this terribly painful ailment, just be guided by the foregoing cases!

For internal piles melt a little Zam-Buk and thoroughly soak a wad, made of clean but old linen. Then apply to the part. If the piles are external application of Zam-Buk is still more simple. Do it upon retiring. Next morning you will be well satisfied.

Zam-Buk is a cure also for cold-sores, and chapped cracked hands, ulcers, festering sores, blood poisoning, eczema, bad leg, ringworm, scalp sores, burns, scalds, and all skin diseases and injuries.

All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at 50c. a box, or may be obtained post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price; 3 boxes for $1.25. You are warned, however, against cheap and dangerous imitations sometimes offered as being "just as good."

Ocean freight rates between American and European ports are to be increased.

THE MONTAGNAIS INDIANS.

The Montagnais Indians, dwelling for the most part on the shores of the Lower St. Lawrence, are very little known. As a rule they are considered an unintelligent tribe and are rather looked down upon by the Crees, Iroquois and Nasquapies. Although not perhaps so thrifty as the Crees nor so educated as the Iroquois, they are far from being unintelligent, having taught themselves to read and write, and being remarkably quick at figures.

These Indians live for the greater part of the year in the interior of the forest, only coming out to the Hudson Bay Co.'s posts for about three months in the summer to trade their fur for such things as they require for another sojourn in the interior and to see their priest.

They leave again for the "bush" in August after having been advanced provisions and clothing by the Hudson Bay Co. and proceed by canoe up the largest rivers (usually the St. Johns or the Romaine rivers) until they reach the height of land, where they camp until the snow comes and they are able to continue their journey on snowshoes, carrying their provisions, clothing and tents on toboggans, men, women and children all carrying their share of the load. The very small children are carried on their mothers' backs, wrapped in fawn skins and laced up in bags made of the same. This bag the mother carries suspended by a thick thong of caribou hide tied around her forehead.

They do not travel very great distances at a time, unless hungry and in search of caribou, for although the men are fast walkers the women do not walk as fast as an average Canadian girl can.

These Indians usually travel in bands of fifty families until they reach the height of land, where they separate, each family going to its respective hunting ground to hunt and trap fur for the remainder of the winter. They camp in large tents made of caribou skins scraped clean of the hair and sewed together. These tents are well banked with snow from the outside to keep out all wind, while spruce boughs make a sweet, warm flooring. In the middle of the floor flat stones are placed as a foundation for the camp fire, the smoke and sparks escaping from a hole left for that purpose at the top of the tent between the tepee-poles.

PASSED AWAY IN NORTH DAKOTA

Death of Abraham Best at Bay Centre—Was Born in Durham County

The Walhalla (North Dakota) Mountaineer, of October 8th, contains the following obituary notice of local interest:—

ABRAHAM BEST.

The sad but expected news of the death of Mr. Abraham Best was received by 'phone from his Bay Centre home on Sunday evening at about seven o'clock, dissolution having taken place about half an hour previous. He had been suffering for some three weeks or more with Bright's disease, and it was known from the first that recovery was practically impossible.

Mr. Best was born in the county of Durham, Ontario, some seventy-six years ago, where he resided until about twenty years ago, coming to his present home in this county in April, 1889. He has been a successful farmer, and has received the respect of the people with whom he was acquainted, being considered an excellent neighbor and a kind friend in need.

He leaves to mourn his death, besides his wife, five sons, Ross, of Oxbow; Wilbur, Winnipeg, and George, Arthur and Elmer, all at home, and three daughters, Misses Tetfie and May, who have been attending a course in nursing at a Winnipeg hospital, and Florence, who has been at home. These and other more distant relatives have the heartfelt sympathy of the hosts of friends in this community.

The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon, from the house, conducted by Mr. Gill, of Winnipeg, of the Plymouth Brethren faith, to which Mr. Best was a staunch adherent. The remains were interred in the Protestant cemetery at Walhalla.

ADVISES COUNCIL TO PASS BY-LAW

If They Want Engine Whistling Discontinued Within City Limits

In reply to a notice from the city that annoyance was being caused by the whistling of Grand Trunk engines in the city, W. R. Tiffin, superintendent of the northern division of the G.T.R., has written the City Council to the effect that the company's men have been instructed not to make any more noise by whistling than necessary in giving the signals. If the city wished whistling discontinued, Mr. Tiffin stated, the Council should pass a by-law forbidding whistling within the city limits.

As the city would be responsible for accidents happening as a result of trains not whistling if the by-law were passed, the Council decided to take no action in the matter.

Neither is the Man Wanted in Lindsay for Assaulting Woman In Mariposa

The Murphys were let down easy this morning at Police Court. Both were arrested last week on charges of vagrancy and held as suspects in the assault on Mrs. McGinnis, of Mariposa, but it has turned out that neither is the right man wanted. Both were discharged.

Charles, who was first dealt with, said he was a hard working man, but had unfortunately taken a drop too much. He had always paid his way and had not begged from anybody, and if allowed off would go back to the woods at once.

Frank said he had been doing a little peddling, and had only stopped here to await a parcel of goods from Toronto.

"Well, your case is enlarged for a week, and if you are found in the city, you will have to take what you get," was the Magistrate's judgment.

Rev. W. P. Webb, a former Hamilton member of the Spectator staff, now a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church of the West Wisconsin conference, is spending his holidays in the city, and last night occupied the pulpit of the Barton street Methodist church. Rev. Mr. Webb is a forceful speaker, and has an excellent delivery, and last night preached a strong evangelistic sermon, taking as his subject 'The Man Born Blind.' In an interesting manner Rev. Mr. Webb told of three aspects of the life of Christ. The Christ of history, of dogma and experience. There was a very large congregation, and the sermon was much enjoyed.—Hamilton Spectator.

Man who Broke Glass in Window Assessed $15.00

Wm. McHale was assessed $5 for being drunk yesterday, and an additional $10 to compensate Mr. F. Mason for the loss of the large window which which he demolished. The accused said he didn't know anything about it, as he was drunk, but that was no excuse in the magistrate's opinion.

A. R. Jackson, who was working in the rear of the shop when the glass was broken, said he heard the crash and when he ran out to the front the man was breaking parts of the glass still in the window frame with his foot. Shortly afterwards he threw himself into the store, and laid there until P. C. McGinty arrived on the scene. He thought the man was very drunk.

Mr. Mason said the size of the glass broken was 60x72 and his loss would amount to $10.

The fine was ordered to be paid forthwith, the alternative being 20 days in gaol.

MEANS OF HELPING THE PASTOR

Discussed by St. Andrew's Young Peoples Society

"How Can We Help Our Pastor," was the important subject discussed last night at the meeting of the Young People's Society at St. Andrew's church last night.

The different ways in which young people might interest themselves in the work of the church were suggested. The topic of the discussion was based on the incident in the life of Moses when the Israelites were in battle with the followers of Amalek. The hands of Moses were upheld in prayer by Aaron and Hur. The incident was suggestive of the power of prayer for and sympathy with ministers in their work.

Owing to the inclement weather the election of officers was postponed till next Monday night, when a missionary meeting will be held and short addresses given by Miss Roma Langford and Miss May Lees, who attended the missionary conference at Whitby.

NECESSITY OF MORE PRAYER

Was Emphasized at Meeting of Young Peoples' Society of Knox Church

A devotional evening was held last night by the members of the Knox Church Young People's Society. After the opening exercises, Mr. A. C. Davenport addressed those present. Experience in church work was briefly referred to, and the necessity of more prayer at the meetings emphasized, as was also the importance of the Bible and its power amongst the nations. It was necessary that the members read and study the scriptures and return thanksgiving to God for His great goodness to mankind. Our gifts to God and the church should be given more liberally, as it was a very important factor in furthering the work of His cause.

During the evening Miss Warren and Miss M. Menzies made a few remarks on the need of more prayer in the Christians' warfare. Next Monday night the meeting will be in charge of Miss Thompson.

MEETING OF GREAT INTEREST TO DAIRYMEN OF THE COUNTY

A special meeting of the dairymen of Peterborough county will be held in the Council Chamber, Peterborough, Wednesday, November 3rd, 1909, at 1.30 sharp.

The above meeting is being held under the auspices of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association. The addresses will be interesting to milk producers, proprietors and makers, and it is to be hoped that the dairymen generally will take advantage of this opportunity to discuss matters pertaining to the dairy business in this district. At this meeting a director will be named to represent this district upon the board for the year 1910.

THE ADDRESSES.

Ald. G. A. Gillespie, director for the district, will occupy the chair. Addresses will be delivered by Messrs. Henry Glendenning, First Vice-President; G. G. Publow, Chief Dairy Instructor, Kingston; Frank Singleton, instructor in Milk Testing, Kingston; George H. Barr, Assistant Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa.

The local dairy instructor will give a report of the work during the season.

SOME COMMUNICATIONS DEALT WITH BY COUNCIL

The City Council dealt with a number of communications last night, among them being the following:

White Bros., carters, wrote stating that they had in the past been given the work of drawing the pipe used by the city. The last order, however, had gone to the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Company, and they did not think such a procedure was fair, as the Fuel and Cartage Company did all the other work for the city.

In reference to this letter Ald. Phelan said that a member of the Fuel and Cartage Company had asked him to favor them with an order for some of the work of drawing the pipes as they were not getting any of the work. Ald. Phelan had instructed the city engineer to give part of the work to the Fuel and Cartage Co.

The letter was referred to the Board of Works.

Mrs. Mary Bowman drew attention to the pipe connecting the New Oxford hotel with the sewer. It was 3 1-2 inches lower at the sidewalk than at the main. It had been remedied, but she had paid $8 for finishing before it was done, and she thought the city should pay it.

The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

John Bain, who resides at 943 Water street, wrote stating he wished to purchase a lot belonging to the city on the south side of Mr. John Lane's lot. He would give $400 for it.

Mr. Bain's letter was referred to the Property Committee.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

CITY STILL HAS CHANCE TO SECURE BURLEIGH POWER

Another Letter Received From Central Ontario Power Company—Power May be Supplied to Bowmanville, Oshawa and Whitby—Peterborough's Offer Considered Low.

Burleigh Falls power has crept out of the hole under the barn after a two months' silence. It loomed up again at the meeting of the Council last night and it is not unlikely that a meeting of the Council will be held for the purpose of going into the matter again. It will be remembered that a month ago the city clerk was instructed to write the Central Ontario Power Company, accepting their offer to supply power at $11 or $12 per horse power. In reference to this a letter has been received from R. J. McLaughlin, solicitor of the company. It was read at last night's meeting of the City Council and was as follows;

S. R. Armstrong, Esq.,
City Clerk,
Peterborough.

Dear Sir,—I have your favor of Sept. 24th, which I have delayed answering until I could consult with some of the parties interested. I presume in your letter that you refer to my letter to you of June 12th last when I estimated that it would cost a private company at least $4 per horse power more to develop and transmit Burleigh power to the city of Peterborough than it would cost the city by reason of extra expense which the company would be put to and which is in detail in the letter, over and above what the city would have to pay.

This estimate was also based upon a guarantee of the bonds of the company by the city which I do not understand by your letter of September 24th, that your city proposes to do. Since that time and since your city allowed the second option to expire without carrying out the understanding arrived at with your Council as to obtaining a report, we have made progress towards an arrangement for the development and operation of the power by private company and in such case we hope to have some part of the power to spare for Peterborough, but an additional cost of about $60,000 will give us a transmission line to Bowmanville, Oshawa and Whitby, where there is a population of about 15,000 inhabitants at present depending entirely upon steam power, and Oshawa especially being a very important manufacturing town and furnishes a large market for power. This line will be comparatively short following the C.P.R. to a point ten miles north of Bowmanville and dropping down to Bowmanville and following the Kingston road to Oshawa and Whitby. The company handling its own power at those points will give these towns a very favorable power rate and yet make a revenue far in excess of your city's offer.

Your city would also, it appears to me, do well to consider before entering into a contract for the whole of the power that we can develop at Burleigh. You may not need it all for four or five years. If you purchased the property out and out as explained to you before you could put in hydraulic and electrical machinery, in units and only bring the power down as you require it.

If Peterborough wants a municipal power plant the only rational way to proceed about it is to buy it, develop it and own it yourself. As far as Burleigh is concerned you have had it under consideration for quite a length of time and if your Council do not decide to act very shortly the opportunity to acquire it will have passed.

The price we offered to you is exceptionally low. It will only amount to an annual rental of about $1.12 1-2 on a gross development of four thousand horsepower; while the Government rental for other purposes on the same river is $2 per horse power for the gross development. Another syndicate in which we are interested is paying the government a much larger price per horse power for the power on the same waters not nearly so near the market than what we have been asking the city of Peterborough for Burleigh. Finally I would say if your city wants to act immediately,

Yours truly,
R. J. McLAUGHLIN,

"We will refer this to the Power Committee," Mayor Rush said.

"What's the use?" asked Ald. McIntyre, the chairman of the committee named. "We might as well settle it here."

"Then we still have a chance to get Burleigh power," one of the aldermen said.

"It looks that way," another put in.

There was some more discussion, but no action was taken.

Siding for New Hardware Warehouse To Come in From East Side

The Peterborough Hardware Company have withdrawn their application for permission to have the C.P.R. put a siding across George street in connection with their new warehouse on George street. Arrangements have been made to have the siding put in from the east side and it will not cross the street.

At the meeting of the City Council last night a letter was read from Mr. George Schneider requesting that the proposed new siding be placed in such a manner as to accommodate the Canadian Canoe Company. The request was referred to the Manufacturers' Committee.

LIQUOR WAS FOUND UNDER SEAT OF BUGGY

Charge Against Resident of Havelock Was Dismissed by Magistrate Edmison

At Havelock yesterday, Wm. Anderson was acquitted by his Worship, Magistrate George Edmison, K.C., on the charge of having had liquor in his possession, with intent to sell, contrary to the local option by-law which is in force in that place. Mr. G. N. Gordon acted in the interests of the defendant and County Crown Attorney R. E. Wood conducted the prosecution.

The information was laid by Elias Williams, License Inspector, for East Peterborough. On September 15th, he found three quart bottles of liquor under the seat of Anderson's buggy, in the shed of Armstrong's hotel. When asked by the inspector if they were his property, Anderson admitted they were.

At the trial defendant abandoned the claim that the liquor found was his and although several other witnesses were called, the License Inspector failed to prove his case.

The liquor was confiscated; the accused consenting to this being done.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

SPORTING NEWS

ART BURN'S RACE LOOKS BAD TO THE EASTERN SPORTS

Victoria, B.C., Oct. 9.—William Stanley, the San Francisco distance runner proved the dark horse of the ten-mile indoor professional race, run here last night, winning in the fast time of 54 minutes 48 seconds. Frank Baylis, of Victoria, who made his first appearance in professional company, was second, one hundred and fifty yards behind the winner, while Art Burns the Calgary runner, was five laps of the twenty-lap track to the bad. Alex. Rowan, of Nanaimo, fell and sprained his ankle in the fifth mile, having to withdraw from the race. Stanley jumped to the lead at the start and cut out a fast pace, he and Rowan having several brushes for the lead in the first two miles. At seven miles Stanley seemed to have run himself out by sprinting with Burns, whom he lapped five times, but he kept up the clip and finished apparently, as fresh as when he started.

Burns' poor showing was the surprise of the race. He was generally picked to win, but seemed unable to stay with the leaders. Baylis ran a remarkably good race for a first attempt.

Burns' in and out running around Peterborough years ago makes Ontario sportsmen regard this race with suspicion. Of course, this suspicion may be groundless, but Burns, poor runner though he is, has no license to be beaten half a mile in 54.48 by a third rate runner.

PETERBOROUGH WILL HAVE TO GO SOME TO BEAT PARKDALE FOURTEEN NEXT SATURDAY

There is no question that the Peterborough rugby team will be up against a tough proposition when they line up against the Parkdale Canoe Club at Riverside Park on Saturday for their opening game in the senior O.R.F.U. series. The paddlers showed their calibre last Saturday by defeating T.A.A.C. by 15—0, and think their chances of winning the championship are very bright.

The locals will be there with a very strong outfit. The team has been thoroughly drilled in all the ins and outs of the game by Dr. Macpherson, and is working in great fashion.

Every night sees big practices and there were twenty-five pig skin hunters out at last night's rehearsal.

LINES ON SPORT

Of Dubby Shea's work in the game at Brantford Saturday, the Courier has the following to say:—Shea at shortstop played one of his strongest games and accepted all of his difficult chances. Shea made the only three-base hit of the game.

Pittsburg made five runs in their first batting yesterday.

The Dundas team was without the services of Craig, the fastest wing man last year in the Intermediate Interprovincial.—Hamilton Herald.

Zbysco, the big foreign wrestler, who is being given a chance to show what he can do with the men of middle calibre before he meets the phenomenal Frank Gotch, apparently had an easy time in Buffalo on Friday night when he threw Wiseman, Walter Smith and Yankee Rogers, getting away with the three of them in fourteen minutes. The second wrestler mentioned is none other than our old pal of the carpet who runs a saloon on the corner of South Cedar street and Myrtle avenue, Buffalo, and as a side line wrestles under the name of "Fritz Mohl, the German champion," "Carl Eckelberg, the Terrible Swede, etc. It's a real nice game.

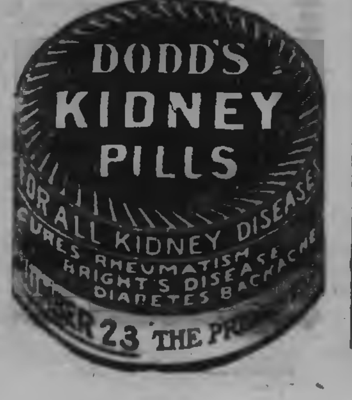
COMMENT ON SIMPSON'S WORK

Hamilton Spectator Says Ben was as Good as Ever in Ottawa Game

On the back line old Ben Simpson, the daddy of them all, was as good as ever. Not only did Ben punt in his own brilliant style, but he used his knowledge of the game to good advantage, and proved his value time after time. Ben bore the brunt of the fray, and although he played center-half for the first time he was just as good as Ottawa's great half-back Williams. The duel between the pair was the feature of the game. Simpson was working under greater difficulties than Williams, inasmuch as he was continually bothered by Stronach, while the Ottawa captain was free nearly all the time. It is true that Ben fumbled a couple of times in the last ten minutes when Ottawa came from behind in such a terrific fashion, and nosed out a glorious victory, but he was always there.—Hamilton Spectator.

RUGBY

In view of the game with Parkdale on Saturday all players are asked to turn out to rugby practice regularly this week.



PAPKE BEAT WILLIE LOUIS

Thunderbolt Had All the Better of New Yorker at Pittsburg

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 9.—Thunderbolt Billy Papke, the only pugilist that ever knocked Stanley Ketchel out, defeated Willie Lewis, of New York, in a six-round bout before the National Sporting Club last night, in Duquesne Gardens, before a packed house. Papke was much the stronger and a harder hitter, and had Lewis in difficulties in the second and third rounds, when he floored the New Yorker three times for the count with righthand swings. Lewis showed gameness, however, and recuperated quickly, showing his best form in the last round, despite Papke's aggressiveness.

The Pittsburg rules allow hitting with one arm free, and as a consequence there was considerable clinching, in which Papke showed to the greater advantage. Lewis' blows did not seem to bother him a bit, while the New Yorker received considerable punishment.

Papke is a wild sort of a fighter, of the Terry McGovern type, inasmuch as he does not mind taking two or three punches, so long as he can land one good smash himself.

There were three cracking good preliminaries, in one of which Tom McCune of Detroit, an old-time fighter, well known in Toronto, was knocked out by Billy Berger, of Pittsburg.

BASEBALL

WAGNER'S OPINION OF COBB.

Detroit, Oct. 11.—Hans Wagner has expressed his opinion on Tyrus Cobb.

The great German player stood in the lobby of the Ponchantrain Hotel this morning chatting with friends. He was asked what he thought of Cobb.

"Cobb is the fastest man I have ever seen," replied Honus. "I never thought he could have that much speed. I heard a lot about Cobb and how fast he was, but he surprised me by the speed he showed on bases last Saturday.

"I wouldn't say that he is the fastest man that ever played ball, because I have not seen all of them, but he has much speed, and a little more than any man I have ever played against."

"Cobb is what I call a perfect player. He lacks nothing. There is not a thing that a ball player should have that Cobb hasn't got, and he's got a bunch of things that no other ball player has. He is perfect in every respect. I can't find any weakness and I see nothing that he could improve on."

"I don't think that Cobb is as good as he can be or will be. He is still a young man. He has not reached his prime. Now, if he takes good care of himself, and there is not any reason why he shouldn't, he will be good for ten years to come. Cobb has got a lot before him, and he should be even better than he is now. A man keeps on improving till he gets to his prime, and Cobb has several years to live before reaching his prime."

This tribute from the fastest baserunner of the National League is accepted by Detroit fans as the greatest compliment which has yet been paid him. The Evans Trophy, for the leading hitter in the two big leagues, arrived here to-day, addressed to Cobb.

Bowlers' Meeting

There will be a meeting of all those interested in bowling at the P.B.C. alleys George street, to-night at 8 o'clock for the purpose of organizing a league and making other arrangements for the season.

BRIGHT SPOTS IN YESTERDAYS GAME

Pittsburg won by 8—6.

The attendance broke all former records at Detroit. There were 18,277 fans present.

The Tigers made 12 hits to the Pirates 12.

Hans Wagner was the star of the contest, making four hits and stealing four bases.

Bush and Delehanty were in the limelight for Detroit, the former making four hits, and the latter two two-baggers and a single.

Cobb's single in the seventh scored one run, and his double in the ninth two more.

The total receipts were $20,676.

Probs Call for the First Touch of Winter

The first real touch of winter is prophesied by the "probs" to-morrow, when the opening snowfall of the year is expected to arrive.

After the beautiful summer and fall of 1909 it seems rather hard to even mention winter, and right up to last Sunday we have been favored with beautiful weather, and the autumn season has been an unusually pleasant one.

And do not neglect your Fire Insurance at any period of the year. It is the best friend you have got in case of accidental fire—which the utmost caution will not not always prevent. It is far better to take out a policy in a good Company and be on the safe side. Remember you cannot insure AFTER the fire, only before.

We issue policies in the most reliable Companies and the annual cost is but a trifle for Fire, Life, Accident & Sickness, Tourist, Automobile Motor Boat, Burglary Insurance and Surety Bonds.

THE YOUNGER SET

Author of
"The Fighting Chance."

"Don't mistake me," added Selwyn, a trifle wearily. "I am not compelling you to decency for the purpose of punishing you. Men never trouble themselves to punish vermin. They simply exterminate them or they retreat and avoid them. I merely mean that you shall never again bring publicity and shame upon your wife, even though now, mercifully enough, she has not the faintest idea that you are what a complacent law calls her husband."

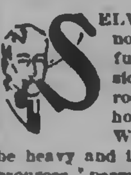
"You decadent little beast!" he said slowly. "Do you suppose that the dirty accident of your intrusion into an honest man's life could dissolve the divine compact of wedlock? Soil it—yes, besmirch it, render it superficially unclean, unfit, nauseous—yes, but neither you nor your vile code nor the imbecile law you invoked to legalize the situation really ever deprived me of my irrevocable status and responsibility. My wife, shamed or unshamed, humbled or unhumbled, true to her marriage vows or false to them, now legally the wife of another, has never ceased to be my wife."

He turned on his heel, paced the little room once or twice, then swung round again:

"Keep your filthy money, wrung from women and boys over card tables. Even if some blind, wormlike process of instinct stirred the shame in you and you ventured to offer belated aid to the woman who bears your name I forbid it; I do not permit you the privilege, except that she retains your name, and the moment you attempt to rob her of that I will destroy you; except for that you have no further relations with her—nothing to do or undo; no voice as to the disposal of what remains of her; no power, no will, no influence in her fate. I supplant you; I take my own again; I reassume a responsibility temporarily taken from me. And now I think you understand!"

He gave him one level and deadly stare; then his pallid features relaxed. He slowly walked past Ruthven, grave, preoccupied, unlocked the door and passed out.

Chapter 23



SELWYN'S lodgings were not imposing in their furnishings or dimensions—a very small bedroom in the neighborhood of Sixth avenue and Washington square—but the heavy and increasing drain on his resources permitted nothing better now, and, what with settling Gerald's complications and providing two nurses and a private suit at Clifton for Alixe Ruthven, he had been obliged to sell a number of securities, which reduced his income to a figure too absurd to worry over.

However, the government had at last signified its intention of testing his invention—chaosite—and there was that chance for better things in prospect. Also, in time, Gerald would probably be able to return something of the loans made.

Night after night, patiently perplexed, he retraced his errant pathway through life back to the source of doubt and pain, and once arrived there he remained, gazing with impartial eyes upon the ruin two young souls had wrought of their twin lives.

Dreadful his duty because he knew that he had never loved her, never could love her! Dreadful—doubly dreadful—for he now knew what love might be, and it was not what he had believed it when he executed the contract which must bind him while life endured.

That she had strayed—under man made laws held guiltless—could not shatter the tie. That he, blinded by hope, had hoped to remake a life already made and had dared to masquerade before his own soul as a man free to come, to go and free to love could not alter what had been done. Back, far back, of it all lay the deathless pact—for better or for worse.

And now, alone, abandoned, helplessly sick, utterly dependent upon the decency, the charity, the mercy of her legal paramour, the young girl who had once been his wife had not turned to him in vain.

Before the light of her shaken mind had gone out she had written him incoherently, practically in extremis, and, if he had hitherto doubted where his duty lay, from that moment he had no longer any doubt. And very quietly, hopelessly and irrevocably he had crushed out of his soul the hope and promise of the new life dawning for him above the dead ashes of the past.

It was not easy to do. He had not ended it yet. He did not know how. There were ties to be severed, friendships to be gently broken, old scenes to be forgotten, memories to kill. There was also love to be disposed of. And he did not know how.

First of all, paramount in his hopeless trouble, the desire to save others from pain persisted.

For that reason he had been careful that Gerald should not know where and how he was now obliged to live, lest the boy suspect and understand how much of Selwyn's little fortune it had taken to settle his debts of "honor" and free him from the sinister pressure of Neergard's importunities.

For that reason, too, he dreaded to have Austin know, because if the truth were exposed nothing in the world could prevent a violent and final separation between him and the foolish boy who now at last was beginning to show the first glimmering traces of character and common sense.

So he let it be understood that his address was his club for the present, for he also desired no scene with Boots, whom he knew would attempt to force him to live with him in his cherished and brand new house. And even if he cared to accept and permit Boots to place him under such obligations it would only hamper him in his duties, because now what remained of his income must be devoted to Alixe.

Even before her case had taken the more hopeless turn he had understood that she could not remain at Clifton. Such cases were neither desired nor treated there. He understood that. And so he had taken for her a pretty little villa at Edgewater, with two trained nurses to care for her and a phaeton for her to drive.

And now she was installed there, properly cared for, surrounded by every comfort, contented, except in the black and violent crises which still swept her in recurrent storms—indeed, tranquil and happy, for through the troubled glimmer of departing reason her eyes were already opening in the calm, unearthly dawn of second childhood. Outside of that dead garden of the past, peopled by laughing phantoms of her youth, but one single extraneous memory persisted—the memory of Selwyn—curiously twisted and readjusted to the comprehension of a child's mind, vague at times, at times wistfully elusive and incoherent, but it remained always a memory and always a happy one.

He was obliged to go to her every three or four days. In the interim she seemed quite satisfied and happy, busy with the simple and pretty things she now cared for, but toward the third day of his absence she usually became restless, asking for him and why he did not come. And then they telegraphed him, and he left everything and went, white faced, stern of lip, to endure the most dreadful ordeal a man may face—to force the smile to his lips and gayety into the shrinking soul of him and sit with her in the pretty, sunny room, listening to her prattle, answering the childish questions, watching her, seated in her rocking chair, singing contentedly to herself and playing with her dolls and ribbons—dressing them, undressing, mending, arranging—until the heart within him quivered under the misery of it and he turned to the curtained window, hands clinching convulsively and teeth set to force back the strangling agony in his throat. And the dreadful part of it all was that her appearance had remained unchanged—unless, perhaps, she was prettier, lovelier of face and figure than ever before.

Thinking of these things now, he leaned heavily forward, elbows on the little table. And suddenly unbidden before his haunted eyes rose the white portico of Silverside, and the greensward glimmered, drenched in sunshine, and a slim figure in white stood there, arms bare, tennis bat swinging in one tanned little hand.

Happily for Eileen, happily for him, alas, love in its full miracle had remained beyond her comprehension. That she cared for him with all her young heart he knew; that she had not come to love him he knew too. So that crowning misery of happiness was spared him. Yet he knew, too, that there had been a chance for him; that her awakening had not been wholly impossible.

And now, leaning there, his face buried in his hands, hours that he spent with her came crowding back upon him, and in his ears her voice echoed and echoed, and his hands trembled with the scented memory of her touch, and his soul quivered and cried out for her.

Storm after storm swept him, and in the tempest he abandoned reason, blinded, stunned, crouching there with head lowered and his clinched hands across his face.

But storms, given right of way, pass on and over, and tempests sweep hearts cleaner, and after a long while he lifted his bowed head and sat up, squaring his shoulders.

Presently he picked up his pipe again, held it a moment, then laid it aside. Then he leaned forward, breathing deeply, but quietly, and picked up a pen and a sheet of paper, for the time had come for his letter to her, and he was ready.

The letter he wrote was one of those gay, cheerful, inconsequential letters which from the very beginning of their occasional correspondence had always been to her most delightful—an easy, light hearted letter, ending in messages to all and a frank regret that the pursuit of business and happiness appeared incompatible at the present moment.

His address, he wrote, was his club. He sent her, he said, under separate cover, a rather interesting pamphlet—a monograph on the symbolism displayed by the designs in Samarkand rugs and textiles of the Ming dynasty. And he ended, closing with a gentle jest concerning bluestockings and rebellious locks of ruddy hair.

And signed his name.

Nina and Eileen, in traveling gowns and veils, stood on the porch at Silverside, waiting for the depot wagon, when Selwyn's letter was handed to Eileen.

The girl flushed up, then, avoiding Nina's eyes, turned and entered the house. Once out of sight, she swiftly mounted to her own room and dropped, breathless, on the bed, tearing the envelope from end to end. And from end to end and back again and over again she read the letter—at first in expectancy, lips parted, color brilliant, then with the smile still curving her cheeks, but less genuine now, almost mechanical, until the smile stamped on her stiffening lips faded and the soft contours relaxed, and she lifted her eyes, staring into space with a wistful, questioning lift of the pure brows.

What more had she expected? What more had she desired? What was she seeking there that he had left unwritten? What was she searching for of which there was not one hint in all these pages?

And now Nina was calling her from the hall below, and she answered gayly and, hiding the letter in her long glove, came down the stairs.

"I'll tell you all about the letter in the train," she said. "He is perfectly well and evidently quite happy, and, Nina"—

"What, dear?"

"I want to send him a telegram. May I?"

"A dozen if you wish," said Mrs. Gerard, "only if you don't climb into that vehicle we'll miss the train."

So on the way to Wyossett station Eileen sat very still, gloved hands folded in her lap, composing her telegram to Selwyn. And once in the station, having it by heart already, she wrote it rapidly:

> Nina and I are on our way to the Berkshires for a week. House party at the Craigs'. We stay overnight in town.
>
> E. E.

But the telegram went to his club and waited for him there, and meanwhile another telegram arrived at his lodgings signed by a trained nurse. And while Miss Erroll in the big, dismantled house lay in a holland covered armchair waiting for him, while Nina and Austin, reading their evening papers, exchanged significant glances from time to time, the man she awaited sat in the living room in a little villa at Edgewater.

"How long has she been asleep?" asked Selwyn under his breath.

"An hour. She fretted a good deal because you had not come. This afternoon she said she wished to drive, and I had the phaeton brought around, but when she saw it she changed her mind. I was rather afraid of an outburst—they come sometimes from less cause than that—so I did not urge her to go out. She played on the piano for a long while and sang some songs—those curious native songs she learned in Manila. It seemed to soothe her. She played with her little trifles quite contentedly for a time, but soon began fretting again and asking why you had not come. She had a bad hour later. She is quite exhausted now."

As he went out the nurse said: "If you wish to return to town, you may, I think. She will forget about you for two or three days, as usual. Shall I telegraph if she becomes restless?"

"No hope, Captain Selwyn."

"Yes. What does the doctor say today?"

The slim nurse looked at him under level brows.

"There is no change," she said.

"No hope." It was not even a question.

"No hope, Captain Selwyn."

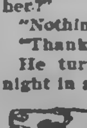
He stood silent, tapping his leg with the stiff brim of his hat; then wearily, "Is there anything more I can do for her?"

"Nothing, sir."

"Thank you."

He turned away, bidding her good night in a low voice.

Chapter 24



THE winter promised to be a busy one for Selwyn. If at first he had had any dread of enforced idleness, that worry, at least, vanished before the first snow flew, for there came to him a secret communication from the government suggesting, among other things, that he report three times a week at the proving grounds on Sandy Hook; that experimental work with chaosite as a bursting charge might begin as soon as he was ready with his argon-primer.

This meant work—hard, constant, patient work. But it did not mean money to help him support the heavy burdens he had assumed. If there were to be any returns, all that part of it lay in the future, and the future could not help him now.

Yet, unless still heavier burdens were laid upon him, he could hold on for the present. His bedroom cost him next to nothing; breakfast he cooked for himself, luncheon he dispensed with, and he dined at random—anywhere that appeared to promise seclusion, cheapness and immunity from anybody he had ever known.

As for his clubs, he hung on to them, knowing the importance of appearances in a town which is made up of them. But this expense was all he could carry, for the demands of the establishment at Edgewater were steadily increasing with the early coming of winter. He was sent for oftener, and a physician was now in practically continual attendance.

Also three times a week he boarded the Sandy Hook boat, returning always at night because he dared not remain at the reservation lest an imperative telegram from Edgewater find him unable to respond.

So, when in November the first few hurrying snowflakes whirled in among the city's canyons of masonry and iron, Selwyn had already systematized his winter schedule, and when Nina opened her house, returning from Lenox with Eileen to do so, she found that Selwyn had made his own arrangements for the winter and that, according to the programme, neither she nor anybody else was likely to see him oftener than one evening in a week.

To Boots she complained bitterly, having had visions of Selwyn and Gerald as permanent fixtures of family support during the season now imminent.

"I cannot understand," she said, "why Philip is acting this way. He need not work like that. There is no necessity, because he has a comfortable income. If he is determined to maintain a stuffy apartment somewhere, of course I won't insist on his coming to us, as he ought to, but to abandon us in this manner makes me almost indignant. Besides, it's having anything but a salutary effect on Eileen."

"What effect is it having on Eileen?" inquired Boots curiously.

"Oh, I don't know," said Nina, coming perilously close to a pout, "but I see symptoms—indeed, I do, Boots—symptoms of shirking the winter's routine. It's to be a gay season, too, and it's only her second. The idea of a child of that age informing me that she's had enough of the purely social phases of this planet! Boots, I've given up all hopes of that brother of mine for her, but she could marry anybody if she chose—anybody—and she could twist the entire social circus into a court of her own and dominate everything. I don't know what to do with the girl. Philip never comes near us—once a week for an hour or two, which is nothing—and the child misses him. There, the murder is out! Eileen misses him. What to do about it I don't know—Boots, I don't know."

Lansing had ceased laughing. He had been indulging in tea—a shy vice of his which led him to haunt houses where that out of fashion beverage might still be had. And now he sat, cup suspended, saucer held meekly against his chest, gazing out at the pelting snowflakes.

"Boots, dear," said Nina, who adored him, "tell me what to do. Tell me what has gone amiss between my brother and Eileen. Something has. And whatever it is it began last autumn—that day when—you remember the incident?"

Boots nodded.

"Well, it seemed to upset everybody somehow. Philip left the next day. Do you remember? And Eileen has never been quite the same. Of course I don't ascribe it to that unpleasant episode—even a young girl gets over a shock in a day. But the—the change—or whatever it is—dated from that night. They, Philip and Eileen, had been inseparable. It was good for them—for her too. And as for Philip, why, he looked about twenty-one! Boots, I—I had hoped—expected—and I was right! They were on the verge of it!"

"I think so, too," he said. "Hello! Somebody's coming, and I'm off!"

"I'm not at home; don't go!" said Nina, laying one hand on his arm to detain him as a card was brought up. "Oh, it's only Rosamund Fane! I did promise to go to the Craigs' with her. Do you mind if she comes up?"

"Not if you don't," said Boots blandly. He could not endure Rosamund, and she detested him, and Nina, who was perfectly aware of this, had just enough of perversity in her to enjoy their meeting.

Rosamund came in breezily, sabled, powdered with tiny flecks of snow, cheeks like damask roses, eyes of turquoise.

"How d'ye do!" she nodded, greeting Boots as she closed with Nina. "I came, you see, but do you want to be jammed and mauled and trodden on at the Craigs'? No? That's perfect! Neither do I. Where is the adorable Eileen? Nobody sees her any more?"

"She went to the Belmour-Carnes' yesterday."

NO ISOLATION HOSPITAL TO BE BUILT THIS YEAR

Council Decides on Close Vote to Send Question to the People—Majority Consider That $15,000 Will Not Be Enough for the Purpose.

The Isolation Hospital will not be built this year. A majority of the City Council is in favor of sending the question to the ratepayers in January and getting their sanction to a by-law for a sum large enough to build and equip the hospital fully, in order that nothing will have to be paid out of current revenue in this connection. It is feared that $15,000—the amount the City Council is allowed to spend for the purpose without going to the people—will not be enough to cover the cost of the hospital, hence the decision arrived at last night.

Those who were in favor of proceeding with the work at the present time were Ald. Phelan, Turner, Gillespie, Morrow and Duncan. Those who voted to send it to the people were: Ald. Duffus, Buller, Hicks, McIntyre, Metheral and Bradburn. Ald. Morgan was not present at the meeting. Mayor Rush was in the chair.

Ald. Bradburn, chairman of the Property Committee, opened the isolation hospital question by stating that he had seen the Water Commissioners and that he had the verbal assurance of two of them that they would extend the water to the hospital free of charge. All the city would have to pay would be the regular rate for water used. The cost of laying the pipe would be $815 for the Hilliard street plan, $1,595 for the Anson st. proposition and $915 for the boundary road scheme. The city would have to install a hydrant near the hospital. He had gone over the specifications for the building and it had been found that by cutting 10 feet off the length of the building the cost could be reduced about $600. The ten feet would be taken off the diphtheria end. The cost of the hospital according to the new estimates would be as follows:

Building	$10,600.00
Plumbing	1,100.00
Heating	1,300.00
Wiring	200.00
Architect's fees	650.00
Extras	150.00
Sewer	328.50
Total	$14,328.50

From this sum could be deducted $75, the estimated cost of cesspool which would not be required, leaving the total cost at $14,253.50. Dr. McPherson, M.H.O., had given Ald. Bradburn an estimate for partially equipping the building and it was $504.

Ald. Bradburn said he considered Dr. McPherson's estimate low and then the cost of the hydrant, levelling and fencing the grounds around hospital, opening a street to it, and several other items were not provided for. He did not think $15,000 was enough.

Ald. Morrow wanted to see the building go ahead at once. With the reduction in cost which was secured by reducing the length of the building ten feet, he thought it could be completed and fairly well equipped for $1,500.

Dr. MacPherson said that the ten-foot reduction could be made if it was absolutely essential.

Ald. Phelan said very little time would be lost by leaving the question to the people. It would only be sixty days difference.

"It means a year's delay," Ald. Morrow said.

"It's a pity to spoil the building for $500," was Ald. Phelan's comment.

Ald. Duffus was anxious to have the hospital built, but he would not stand for paying one cent out of the current revenue for building or equipping it. He moved that a by-law be sent to the people for a sum sufficient to cover the complete cost of the hospital. Ald. Hicks seconded the resolution.

Ald. Morrow moved in amendment that the Property Committee consult with James Rose, the prospective contractor, and to enter into a contract at once with him if satisfactory arrangements could be made.

Ald. Metheral said he favored going to the people if the hospital could not be completed in full for $15,000.

Ald. Duncan seconded Ald. Morrow's motion.

Ald. Gillespie said that the lack of the hospital was a handicap to the man of moderate and smaller means.

There was a good deal of discussion as to whether Mr. Rose would reduce his tender $500 on account of the reduction in the size of the building. He is working in Norwood and could not be interviewed.

Ald. McIntyre said he considered the reduction in size would only be equivalent to about $400.

Ald. Morrow's amendment was then voted on and failed to carry, the vote being the same as mentioned at the first of this article. The main motion carried, the vote being exactly the reverse, and the ratepayers will now decide the question.

It is likely that the by-law, which will be prepared, will call for about $18,000.

On motion it was decided to return all tenders their deposit cheques.

HAYS GETS PRESIDENCY OF THE GRAND TRUNK

He is Also Made a Director of the Company, Vice G. C. Glyn, Resigned—Smithers Will be Chairman of the Board of Directors.

London, Oct. 13.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The G.T.R. report states that it is advisable that General Manager Hays should have the same rank as is accorded to the holders of positions similar to his on other railways in America, therefore he is to be appointed president and elected director, vice G. C. Glyn, resigned. Smithers is to be chairman of the board, holding the powers and performing the duties hitherto discharged by Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson. The board will continue to have the same control as hitherto over the administration. In order to recognize the services of Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson the general meeting will be asked to sanction an allowance to him of $7,500 yearly.

The report shows gross receipts for the half year of £2,866,468, against £2,854,787, working expenses being at the rate of 72.54 per cent., against 72.47, totaled £2,079,196, against £2,066,144.

The net revenue was £845,364, against £781,905, additional items bringing the net revenue receipts to £962,201; net revenue charges, including Canada Atlantic deficiency of £41,103 and Detroit and Grand Haven deficiency £25,749; total £682,269, leaving a surplus of £279,932, against £105,494.

The total amount available for dividend is £292,159, from which dividends are recommended on four per cent. guaranteed and first preference stock, which leaves a balance of £9,-938 carried forward.

Train mileage decreased 381,354. There is a net revenue deficiency on Great Western of £13,883, against £2,-846, but deducting this from surplus for the half year ending December, 1908, there remains a surplus for the year to June 30, of £10,440, which, added to £7,539 carried forward June, 1908, admits of the payment of full interest on the second mortgage bonds, with a balance left of £5,650.

DISSOLUTION OF BRITISH PARLIAMENT THIS WEEK

London, Oct. 13.—The dissolution of Parliament this week, marking the opening of the fight for the abolition of the House of Lords, is believed to be probable by many leading politicians to-day.

Lord Lansdowne, Mr. Balfour, and Premier Asquith were in conference with the King yesterday in rapid succession, and politicians generally are inclined to think that the interviews foreshadow a startling development in the budget fight.

The King returned to London Monday evening, foregoing his contemplated trip to the race meeting at Newmarket, to be prepared for just such an emergency as now seems imminent.

Both Lord Lansdowne and Balfour are strongly opposed to the proposed financial program, with Premier Asquith just as staunchly arrayed on the other side. The fact that men of such widely divergent political views have been called into conference by the King is believed to indicate that the King's insistence on a compromise may yet be effective.

The King is much opposed to having the country plunged into an election at the present time.

Premier Asquith and Chancellor Lloyd-George have both quitted the political arena for the remainder of the week, the former taking a holiday at Sandwich and the latter making a motor trip to Normandy. The King also has departed from London to attend the Newmarket race meetings, so that it is not likely that there will be any development in the budget crisis until next week.

The suggestion of recourse to a referendum appearing in The Times meets with the sympathy of neither party.

ENTERS ACTION FOR LOSS OF LEG

Orangeville, Oct. 13.—The Dufferin fall Assizes opened yesterday, Mr. Justice Teetzel presiding, with two civil cases only. The first is that of a farmer, Joseph Walker of Markdale, vs. the C.P.R. In getting off a train, he alleges, that it started without warning and he lost a leg. W. E. Raney, K.C., is acting for Walker.

Walker said he always celebrated the 12th of July, although not an Orangeman. He had three drinks of lager before leaving Markdale, where he had been given a flask of whisky almost empty, but said he did not taste it. He had been helped on the train at Saugeen Junction, after having fallen off the steps. A claims agent had gotten him to sign a statement, stating that it was his own fault. Witness could not read or write, therefore he stated that he was misled by the agent, who claimed to be a Government man looking into these accidents to see that he got justice. The case continues to-day.

TO PAY EXPENSES OF AN EXPLORER

London, Oct. 13.—At a meeting at the Mansion House, presided over by the Lord Mayor, and attended by a number of other prominent persons yesterday, it was unanimously agreed to support the fund recently proposed for the equipment of the South Pole expedition of Capt. Robert F. Scott. A subscription list was opened which Sir Edgar Speyer headed with a contribution of $5,000.

Capt. Scott was present and said: "The country need never fear that its dignity will be lowered by this expedition. We may fail, but there will never be any cause to fear that our story will be doubted."

North Bay, Oct. 13.—In the Assizes, before Justice Riddell, Spanelli, an Italian, was found guilty of the murder of a Chinaman at Haileybury, last July. T. W. The crown alleged that Spanelli and others had had supper at the Chinese restaurant, had refused to pay, and that when Ming Shew, aged 76, tried to detain Spanelli, he had stabbed him.

The defence was that Spanelli had not dined and had been threatened by several Chinamen for refusing to pay. The prisoner seemed quite unconcerned.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

STORY OF MAN WHO SAYS HE MURDERED ETHEL KINRADE

Edward William Bedford Appears in Bow Street Police Court in London—Police Believe That Man is Crazy—Says He Was Working in Toronto at the Time.

London, Eng., Oct. 13.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Edward William Bedfort appeared in the Bow street Police Court yesterday. He is six feet tall, with clear-cut features, slimly built, with fair hair and blue eyes. He gave his age as twenty-one. His answers to the magistrate were clear and decisive.

Bedfort, confessing to Supt. Forest, said: "I committed the murder in Hamilton, Canada, last year by shooting Miss Ethel Kinrade. I have come to give myself up; I cannot stand the worry of it any longer."

Bedfort afterwards put his confession in writing, taking ten foolscap pages to tell his story. His statement was not read in court. A remand of one week was ordered. He claims to have been born in Minneapolis.

Forest believes Bedfort is crazy, and not really guilty. Chief Inspector Kydd also doubts him. In his confession he says the crime took place in summer, but yesterday he corrected this and said there was snow on the ground when he ran through the yard. Bedfort claims to have been working along the docks in Toronto.

In his confession he states that, so far as he could remember, the affair occurred in the summer of last year.

The man he met in Toronto was about 33 or 34 years old, five feet seven inches in height, of medium build, with ginger hair and heavy drooping moustache. The fair-haired stranger said:

"If you can keep a secret you learn in the next few days I will pay you well."

Bedfort replied, "I am willing to do anything if there is money in it."

The confession then gives an account of the negotiations between the two, the stranger saying that he wanted to kill Miss Ethel Kinrade for jilting him. He produced two revolvers, one a Mauser and the other an old-fashioned one.

Bedfort said: "Then you really mean to kill this girl?"

The stranger replied: "No; I want you to do that. That is the reason why I am going to pay you."

The stranger then gave Bedfort a lot of $5 and $10-bills and told him to buy a disguise. Bedfort says that he bought one black beard and two ginger beards, a black overcoat, and two black caps in the Jewish quarter of Toronto in a street turning off Queen, giving $2.20 for the lot. He then went to Hamilton, met the stranger, gave him the disguises except the overcoat. The stranger then dressed roughly like a tramp. The stranger took back all the money he had already given Bedfort as a security. He, Bedfort, was to do the work, the stranger promising him money to take him out of the country, and $400 in addition after the murder was accomplished. Bedfort was then given a ginger wig cap and was told to make himself look as much like a tramp as possible and was told to meet on Herkimer street "or something like that," next morning.

Here the mysterious stranger pointed out a corner house with a balcony. He told Bedfort to go there about 2.30 p.m. as only two girls would be there. He was told to demand money. When he went to the house he saw a man about twelve houses away, and subsequently came to the door of the house. Bedfort had the door opened to him by a dark girl, about 24 years old. She was frightened when he forced admittance and ran away; another girl came down stairs and at her he emptied a revolver.

He fire five shots. She fell. He ran through the house, escaped through a window at the back and caught a train about five o'clock for Toronto. He stayed over night at a cheap boarding-house near the station. He met the man the next afternoon, who told him he had killed the right girl and gave him a ticket for Montreal. He there received the money.

He got a ticket for England per the Laurentic in the name of Christopher. "The man never told me his name," added Bedfort, "and I have no idea how he can be found."

The man, however, gave him letters of introduction to two persons, one in Liverpool and one in London, Eng. The names he did not care to give, though he had called on both.

Though the high commissioner's office is in receipt of full particulars of the affair and the confession, the representative of the Canadian Associated Press on calling there was curtly told nothing could be imparted to him. Fortunately there were other sources of information, not so official, gave response to reasonable requests.

Wrights Are Pleased.

Calgary, Alta., Oct. 13.—"Thank God for that, old man, you have brought us the best news we have had for many a long day; shake," said Montrose Wright, husband of Florence Kinrade, to a reporter when shown a despatch stating that a man named Bedfort in London, Eng., had confessed to the murder of Ethel Kinrade.

Neither could tell anything as to Bedfort. Wright is about to take up the study of law.

Confession Does Not Tally.

Hamilton, Oct. 13.—The details of Edward William Bedfort's alleged confession in London that he is the murderer of Ethel Kinrade, tend only to further discredit his story in the eyes of the local police, although he is correct in some of the details of the crime as described by the dead girl's sister, Florence.

Bedfort's story scores most heavily in the matter of the false, heavy, drooping moustache that he says he wore. That was a point in the description of the murderer that Florence gave the police, in which she never faltered.

There are points in which there are discrepancies in Bedfort's story as compared with the facts known, and with Florence's story.

He says he committed the murder in the summer of 1908, whereas the crime was committed in February last.

The speaks of the Kinrade house as a corner house, when it is almost in the middle of the block.

He says he fired five shots; the police found eight or nine bullets.

He says he escaped through a window in the back of the house; the ground was covered with light snow and the only tracks in the back yard were those of a girl, so the police claim, and Florence says the murderer left by the front door.

The description of the man Bedfort says hired him to do the deed is about the description the police sent broadcast in printed form of the alleged murderer. It was the description Florence supplied the afternoon of the tragedy.

Didn't Sail on Laurentic.

Montreal, Oct. 13.—The steamer Laurentic, on which the man Bedfort claims to have booked passage within a few days of the Kinrade murder in February, sailed from here for the first time on May 18.

MAN KILLED IN BOILER EXPLOSION AT AYLMER

Water and Light Service Are Destroyed by a Disastrous Bursting of Boiler, and a Shoe Factory is Burned—Night Engineer Fisher Killed.

Aylmer, Ont., Oct. 13.—A 500-pound pressure boiler in the combined electric and waterworks plant at Aylmer, exploded at 7.05 o'clock last night, killing one man, H. Fisher, and damaging considerable property.

The explosion was a terrific one, and shook the ground and buildings in the town, so that the residents at first thought they had been visited by an earthquake.

A large building nearby, owned by the town and occupied by the Brandon Shoe Co., was wrecked and burned.

When the fire broke out, no water could be obtained from the water works, but it was finally taken from the condensing works.

One piece of the boiler weighing many pounds was thrown into the air, and in coming down struck a two-storey barn owned by Dr. Augustine. It went through the building into the basement, missing the owner by less than three feet.

The boiler was situated in a hollow, and another piece was thrown up the hill, and was driven through a house occupied by Dr. Sinclair, and demolished the stove in the kitchen. About half of the windows in the town were broken.

It was at first reported that there was at least three persons killed, and perhaps six or seven, but this was finally found to be false.

Fisher, the man who was killed, was the night engineer. His remains were found underneath in a horribly mangled and burned condition.

Many of the citizens have suffered considerable damage to property either by the force of the concussion or by heavy pieces of iron from the boiler, which were hurled in every direction over the town.

The inability to procure water when the fire broke out in the Brandon Shoe Co.'s building, caused a great deal of fear on the part of the inhabitants. A strong wind was blowing and carried sparks and burning pieces of wood over the nearby buildings.

It is reported that the boiler was inspected only yesterday afternoon, and found all right.

The damage has not been estimated.

METHODISTS WILL SEND OUT MORE MISSIONARIES

Ottawa, Oct. 13.—The Methodist Mission Board yesterday adopted the report of the China sub-committee of the foreign work committee, recommending the taking over of the London Missionary Society's plant at Chung King. The Young People's Forward Movement reported as[illegible] $13,281 and liabilities $2,[illegible]. Grants were made as follows: Literature, $6,000; summer schools, $600; office expenses, $3,900.

Provision is being made to place 70 new missionaries in China and Japan in the next five years.

In Alberta and Saskatchewan the proposal is to increase gradually during five years until there are 200 in each of these provinces. An increased expenditure of $100,000 for new domestic missions is anticipated and $125,-000 for foreign will be the position five years hence.

PURE WATER

Experience is the best teacher. This is one of the ancient maxims learned at school. This summer Lindsay's experience in typhoid fever has been conspicuous by its absence. The Lindsay papers say that it is due to the new process of ozonization adopted by the town. Not one single case of typhoid in a town of 7,500 inhabitants this last summer! In past summers with sand filtration there were many cases. The improvement is surely such as to give us pause in Peterborough long enough to ask if the ozonizing process is not likely to make us a healthier and happier people in Peterborough. The artesian wells of London and Winnipeg would be a delicious realisation of our dreams of good water, but if we cannot have them, by all means let us have a process that purifies water chemically and not mechanically.

THE BRITISH BUDGET

The British Budget cannot be very well objected to. People with broad lands and long pedigrees should not wish to keep up appearances at the expense of the toilers. It is unreasonable. It is more. It is selfish to the point of wickedness. It is the same with the money-barons of the U.S. and Canada. They make the people "sweat and groan under a weary life," merely that they may have the cream of everything. It is true these strictures do not apply to every lord or every looter. But that it is true as a general rule is well understood by the public. The day is not far distant when the scandalous privileges arrogated to themselves by the rich money-grabbers will disappear. The Whitney Government's action with respect to the Niagara power swipers is an instance. All grabbers, whether of land or oil, or monopoly are the same. The trail of the serpent is over it all.

THE "SAW-OFF"

The Hamilton Herald.

Some even of the strong party papers have begun to protest against the election "saw-off." Not so much, however, because it is a wicked thing in itself—something in the nature of compounding felony—as because it often causes unnecessary inconvenience, trouble and expense. They object to having the 'way-up party magnates arrange for election petitions which the local party authorities don't want, merely that they may be "sawed-off" against election petitions from the other side.

The real objection to the election "saw-off" however, is that it is a device for the concealment of election crime. In one constituency a Liberal is elected by means of corrupt and fraudulent methods, and the Conservatives in the constituency gather enough evidence to unseat him. In another constituency a Tory is elected by the same sort of methods, and the Liberals of the constituency have in their possession evidence sufficient to unseat him. Both of these men ought to be unseated, and the crimes by which they have profited ought to be brought to light. But the magnates of the two parties get together and make an arrangement. The Liberal magnates would like very much to expose the wickedness of the Tories and the Tory magnates are equally desirous of exposing Liberal fraud and corruption. But the desire of the magnates on each side to reveal the sins of the enemy is not so strong as their desire to conceal their own sins. And so they come to an agreement to withdraw both petitions and the sins on both sides are covered up.

Such an arrangement is in itself but little short of a crime. It should be made, if not impossible, at least very difficult. This might be done by the appointment of a public prosecutor with large authority, similar to that which is possessed by the auditor-general—whose duty it would be to take charge of all election petitions and prosecute offenders against the election law. And once a petition is filed its withdrawal ought not to be permitted.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The newspapers still continue to ring the changes on bribers, bribe-takers and perjurers in connection with elections. All demand the application of a remedy. There can be no doubt left in the mind of anybody who has been through the mill that the people are made the dupes of political carpet-baggers of all shades of opinion who "away," saw-off and otherwise trade advantages to their own gain and the public loss. It is time this form of crookedness met its death.

The poet asks, "Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" Nevertheless Sir Thomas Lipton was blackballed for a self-advertising tea-taster by the Royal Thames Yacht Club. In the U.S., the spirit of exclusiveness has pervaded the entire social fabric. There is nothing our American cousins rather dwell upon than the haughty exclusiveness of this regiment or that, of this club or that. The spirit of grace the delight of honouring those who deserve honour has disappeared. The worship of money has led to the worship of self. In the language of the day, "It is simply rotten."

CHEESE SOLD AT LINDSAY AT 11 3-8 CENTS

Lindsay, Oct. 11.—At the regular meeting of the Lindsay Cheese board held in the Council Chamber at ten o'clock this morning, Mr. Flavelle bought the entire factory output shown on the board at 11 3-8 cents, there being in all 1,151 cheeses.

FILLMORE CHINA.

Interesting Pieces of Crockery Added Recently to White House Collection.

Interesting pieces of china once owned by President Fillmore were placed recently in the White House cabinets. They were obtained through the efforts of Mrs. Abby G. Baker, who has charge of the White House collection, under the direction of Mrs Taft. She learned that much of the Fillmore china could be found in Buffalo, the former president's old home. There she found that two sisters, Mrs. B. Terry and Miss Cornelia Burtis, had bought the old Fillmore mansion with almost all the furniture and china. They were delighted to add something to the White House collection and gave an old Staffordshire platter, a willow pattern plate and other dishes.

The present administration is the first for more than half a century that has not been obliged to buy a new set of dishes for the White House, and the reason why is simply that congress soon after Mr. Roosevelt became president gave him $22,000 to spend on an immense outfit of chinaware, imported from England.

Up to Abraham Lincoln's time the executive mansion was supplied with crockery in a desultory sort of way, dishes, plates and cups and saucers being purchased whenever more of them were needed. But Mrs. Lincoln persuaded congress to give her money for a fresh outfit, a very beautiful set, ordered from France, with a blue border, gilt stars for the states of the Union and an eagle and scroll, with the words "E Pluribus Unum" on every piece.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness, and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter." — MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

High Sea Therapeutics.

There was an old sea-dog, the captain of a freighter, who used to make the port of Montreal quite often, and who was well known to all the marine reporters as a character. He was a French-Canadian, of the hardy Gulf stock, which takes to the sea by hereditary instinct, and all his family were sailors. A number of stories are told of this man and his career, which dated back to the days of "wind-jammers." He was even in the smuggling business for a while, and they say that once when asked as to the seamanlike qualities of his first mate, a splendid type of young French-Canadian, he answered:

"Is he a good sailor? Why, nom de dieu, he is one of the best what there are—is he not a smuggler?"

But one of the best yarns told of the captain, is his account of the entire futility of the medicine chests required by law on such boats as do not carry a surgeon.

"They are no good," he is reported to have said, "no good for nothing in the world. Last trip one of my men get sick. I look at his disease in the book of directions, and it say give him so much of Number Twelve: I look at bottle Number Twelve, and it is all empty. I therefore take half a dose of Number Seven and half a dose of Number Five, and I mix them. What you think happen then? Why, corbleu, that fellow he is die!"

A Real Sourdough.

During the past week Col. Donald MacGregor, one of the best known of Yukon and British Columbia prospectors, spent a few days in Toronto on his way from Regina, where he has lived for the past year, to his old home in Glengarry County, Ontario. The colonel is a real old-timer. He first went West over fifty years ago, going by way of the Isthmus of Panama. A cousin of his made the biggest strike in the Cariboo district when gold was first discovered there. This man was afterwards known all over the north and west as Cariboo Cameron, and Mr. MacGregor, then a youth, hearing of his kinsman's success, caught the gold fever, and started out on his remarkable and adventurous career. For many years he was one of the most active men on the Coast, working not only for himself but for the advancement of British Columbia. During the Robson regime he was colonization agent in the province, and founded the Squamish valley settlement, now a thriving community. He was also prominent in organizing a capable militia force on the Coast.

THE POPULAR ONTARIO LINE

The commanding position of the Grand Trunk Railway System in connection with the transportation service of the Province of Ontario is well illustrated by the fact that in the premier province of Canada there are fourteen incorporated cities every one of which is located on the tracks of the Grand Trunk Railway. There are 100 incorporated towns, 25 of which are exclusively on the Grand Trunk. The incorporated villages number 66, of which 35 are exclusively on the Grand Trunk and 13 additional reached by tracks of the Grand Trunk.

It is easy to see how Canada's pioneer double-track railway, with its unsurpassed roadbed, high-grade passenger coaches, etc., is the popular Ontario line. Service wins and the Grand Trunk serves Ontario well.

YOU NEED NOT DROWN.

What to Do When Cramp Comes to You In the Water.

Ninety-nine times in one hundred drowning is the result of fright and frenzy. There is a public horror of cramps. Not one case of cramps in one thousand is dangerous if the victim knows what to do and does it. Every long-distance swimmer entering a race expects to get cramps, yet he doesn't drown and he doesn't stop swimming either. He keeps going until his legs are in knots; still, he doesn't sink. He plugs along until there isn't another kick in him, and even now he doesn't go down. Instead of that he rolls over on his back and waits for the boat to pick him up. It may be a minute or it may be an hour, but until the boat comes the expert will be floating around like a ship.

When you catch a cramp in your arms or legs don't get excited. You may yell, but keep yourself under control. Don't exert yourself, for it takes little or no effort to keep afloat. Crush down the feeling of panic. Stretch out your arm or leg, as the case may be, until you are straining to the utmost. Then strain a bit harder, and watch the lumped muscle go down.

The dangerous cramp is in the stomach. When that takes you your breath goes, and you are not able to shout for help or even to articulate a sound. I have known of just two cases among hundreds of thousands of swimmers. When you get that kind of cramp you may as well say your prayers, but you won't get it if you don't eat for two hours before going into the water. Professional swimmers go hungry half a day before entering a race, and they never know such a thing as a stomach cramp.

If a bather in trouble would use common sense he never would drown. The belief is general that three times under water for the drowning person means crape and flowers. It's true if you make the mistake of taking water for air. Hold your mouth shut when you are under water, and you'll keep going down and coming up all day. Don't exhaust yourself struggling. Relax every muscle and don't move a hand. You'll find that you'll never sink lower than your ears, and that in a few seconds you'll rise up until your shoulders are dry. You can keep on doing this indefinitely, but, of course, if you drink water you'll be weighed, and down you'll go.

NAM AND ITAL IN THE CAPITAL OF THE AZTECS

WHAT THEY SAW WHEN THE INDIANS ROSE AGAINST THE SPANIARDS

BY ACTON ARCHER

(Copyright, 1909, by the New York Herald Co. All Rights Reserved.)

CORTES, the Spaniard, conqueror of Mexico, first entered the capital of the Emperor Montezuma without striking a blow. He did this under pretense that he came as a friend to bring greetings from his master, the King of Spain, but when once he was in, with his cannon and his soldiers, the Aztecs could not get rid of him. Indeed he even forced Montezuma himself to come to visit the Spaniards in the great palace where they had been lodged, and after that he held that Indian monarch captive, though Montezuma was too proud to let his people know his miserable condition and pretended that he remained with the strangers because he chose to do so.

But Cortes was compelled to leave the city on an expedition and in his absence his lieutenant in command killed some of the Aztec nobles. This was more than the warlike Aztecs could stand and they closed their markets so that the Spaniards could get no more food. As the beautiful city had been built on an island in the Lake of Texcoco, the city market was the only place from which food could be had.

Cortes was in a great rage when he came back and learned what had happened. The timid Emperor, fearful of some harm to himself, hastened to send two of his pages to ask permission to see Cortes so that he might explain to him that the action of his people was not his fault. The pages whom he sent were two boys. One of them, Nam, was lame and thoughtful, and the other, Ital, was strong and straight as an arrow and fond of the exercises of war. They found the Spanish commander walking up and down his chamber.

"What do you want?" he demanded roughly when he saw the pages.

"Our master, the Emperor Montezuma, sends us to ask you to receive him," Nam replied.

"What have I to do with your dog of an Emperor who allows us to starve before his eyes?" Cortes thundered, and then, turning to his captains, he added:—"Seize them and shut them up in the strong room. Let them have neither a drop of water nor a mouthful of food until the market has been opened."

Ital drew himself up indignantly. "We are only boys," he said, "but we are messengers of the Emperor and if you lay a hand upon us you will pay dearly for it!"

Cortes paid no attention, and the captains, glad that his wrath had fallen upon some one besides themselves, seized the boys and hurried them to the strong room, where they thrust them in and bolted the massive door upon them.

In this strong room the golden treasure of Montezuma's father had been kept. The Spaniards had taken the treasure, leaving the room empty. It was well suited for a prison, for its floor and walls were of stone, and it had no windows or any other door than the one by which the boys had entered. As soon as this was closed they found themselves in darkness as black as ink. Ital began to laugh.

"What is it that amuses you?" Nam asked in surprise.

"That we should have been through so many dangers together safely, only to starve to death in this hole," Ital replied.

"I'm not so certain that we shall starve here," Nam replied. "They may open the market, and then we shall get out—that is, if the Spaniards happen to remember us."

"There's not much chance of that," Ital said.

"True," Nam admitted, "and that is all the more reason why we should see whether this place is as strong as it is said to be."

They set to work in the darkness, feeling their way first all around the walls of the room, which was circular in shape. For a second time they made the search, hoping to discover some loose stone that they might remove, but the wall everywhere was solid. Hours were devoted to this examination and both boys were beginning to be overcome by weariness. Not a sound reached them in their dungeon.

Having satisfied themselves that there was no escape through the wall, they began to try the stone floor. At last Ital's fingers felt what seemed to be a bar of metal sunk in the pavement. He called Nam and together they sought to get it out of the groove in which it lay.

Ital managed to force his fingers under one end of the bar, and putting forth all his strength he tugged upward. Slowly the bar yielded.

"Look out!" cried Nam suddenly in the darkness, "I'm going!"

Nam had been kneeling on a broad slab of stone that formed part of the floor. As Ital raised the bar this slab tilted as though it had been set on a pivot, as in fact it was, and Nam slipped down through the floor into the opening beneath. He did not fall far. A flight of stone steps had been built under the slab and upon these he landed.

"Where are you?" Ital called with anxiety, for he could see nothing.

"Safe!" Nam replied, and he explained what had happened.

"Hold down the edge of the slab and I'll join you," Ital said.

Nam pressed his weight upon the lower edge of the slab, and in an instant Ital came sliding down upon him. The boys rolled together down the steps, and they heard the great stone swing back into place over their heads.

"Maybe we are worse off now than we were before," Ital said. "Where does this passage lead?"

"I don't know," Nam answered. "I never heard any one speak of it, and I don't believe that they knew it was here. We shall have to find out for ourselves."

"Come on, then" cried Ital. "I only hope that we shall find some water."

They clasped hands and began their advance through the passage, each feeling the wall nearest to him with the hand that was free. They thought that in this way they would run less risk of stumbling into some pit in the darkness. For a time the passage ran straight ahead, then it turned abruptly, first to the right and then to the left. The fine dust on the floor showed that it had not been used for a great many years. Once they reached a place where a branch led off, and they followed this only to find that it ended in a solid wall. They returned to the passage they had left, taking care not to turn back in the direction from which they had come before reaching the branch. In this way they continued for a long time, until finally they found themselves climbing many flights of steps, one after another, each flight leading upward in a direction different from the last.

This greatly puzzled them, for they knew that they must have climbed far higher than the roof of the palace. They had no idea where they were, but there was nothing for them to do except to keep on. They were beginning to suffer intensely from thirst, which was made worse by the dust stirred by their feet.

"We can't go much further," Nam said, after they had climbed twenty or thirty flights of steps.

"We shall not have to. Look there!" Ital replied.

He pointed upward at a faint ray of light that shone at the top of the stairway they had reached.

They sprang up the stairs with renewed hope. The light came through a narrow space between the stones that blocked the end of the passage, but they could see through it the blue sky and hear the voices of men.

"They are Aztecs!" Ital said. "We are saved!" and placing his lips close to the crack he shouted for help.

It seemed at first that whoever was outside could not determine where the cry came from, but Ital continued to shout and soon the boys could see faces and moving forms.

"They are priests," said Nam. "We are on the temple."

This turned out to be the case. The temple of the War God of the Aztecs was a towering mound of earth and stone, which rose from terrace to terrace high above the palaces and houses. The passageway had led them from the old palace under the square in front of it and up the inside of the great pyramid. The priests at first were astonished to hear the voices issuing from what they believed to be the solid wall, but the boys told them who they were. One of the stones of the wall was pried out and the two prisoners were released.

Each took a deep draught of water and then, following the aged chief priest into his little cell behind the huge and dreadful image of the War God, glittering with chains of gold and ropes of jewels, they related what had taken place in the palace. The priests listened with exclamations of indignation, and when they had ended the chief priest started to his feet.

"It is enough!" he cried. "We have borne too long with the strangers! Sound the drum!"

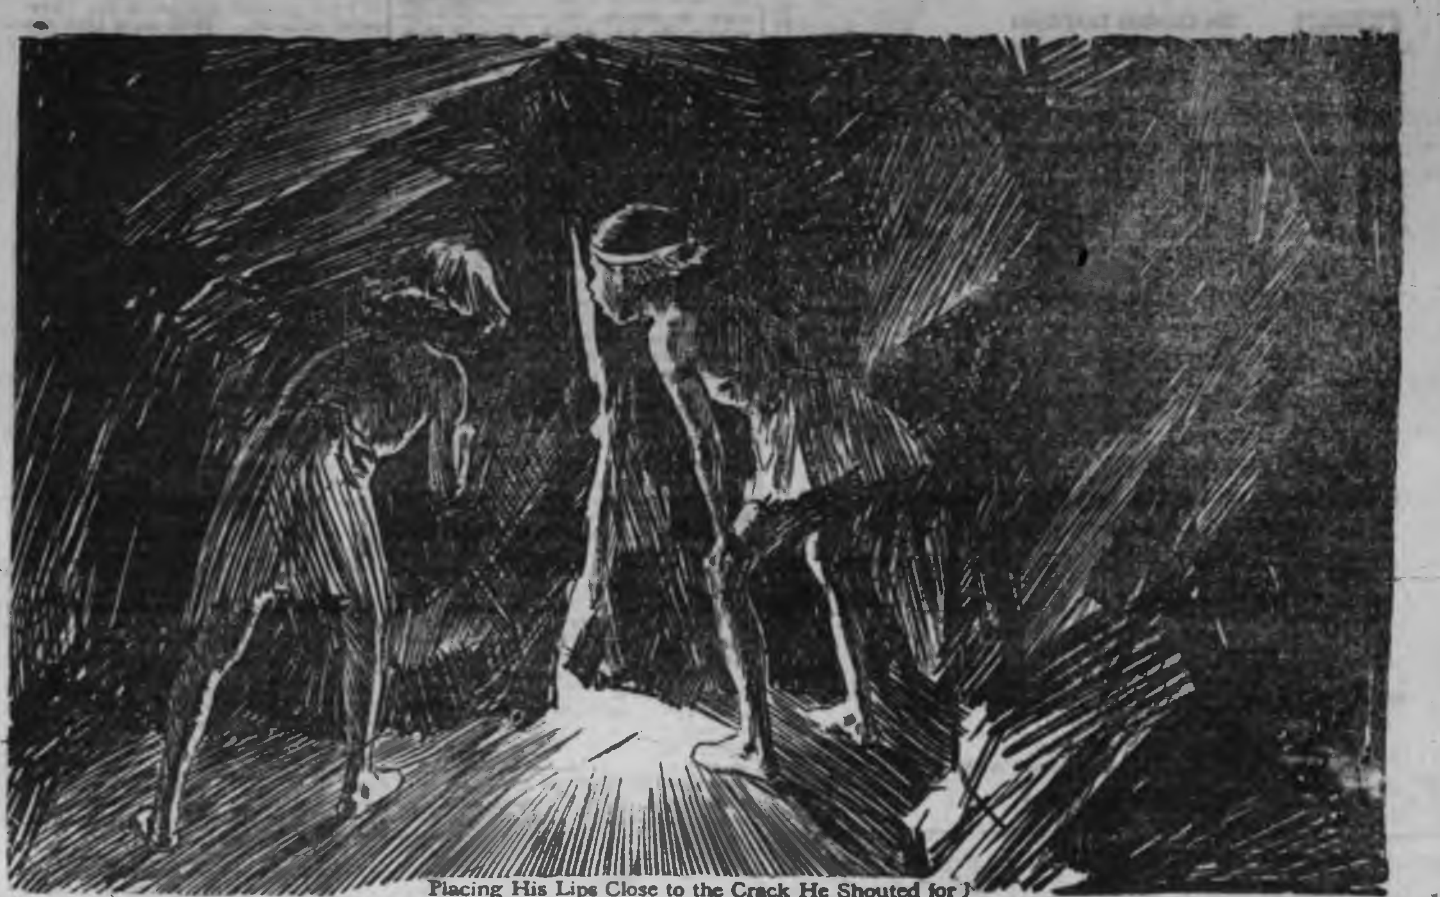
With wild shouts the priests rushed out upon the platform before the altar of the War God, dragging with them the great drum made of the skins of serpents, which could be beaten only in times of peril to the nation. It was the summons of the War God to battle.

With slow and measured strokes a stalwart priest struck the sacred drum. From its hollow issued a deep, throbbing tone, threatening as distant thunder, that rolled far across the blue lake and echoed back from the rocky sides of the mountains miles away. Well the Aztecs knew what it meant. Nam and Ital, looking down from the temple height, could see them rushing in crowds into the streets and gazing upward at the temple. A throng of priests ran down among them, tossing their arms and shouting:—"War to the white men! Death to the strangers! The Emperor is in danger!"

Warriors hastened to arm themselves and within an hour they began the attack upon the palace, while from the mainland, along the causeways which led through the lake to the city, came the caciques and great lords of the empire with their troops, plumes waving and banners tossing in the wind.

To the showers of arrows and stones rained upon them the Spaniards replied with cannon and musket shot and with whizzing bolts from their crossbows. Hundreds of the Indians were slain, but the booming of the war drums inspired them with desperate courage and they even succeeded in breaking down a part of the wall that protected the palace.

Nam and Ital obtained weapons from the priests and they were among those



Placing His Lips Close to the Crack He Shouted for

THE SAGACIOUS BROTHERS

A TALE FROM BOSNIA. RETOLD BY LOUISE SOUVAN

ONCE there were three brothers who owned nothing but a good deal of sagacity and an old mare. The mare was more needful to them than all their shrewdness together, for she helped them to make a living, little as it was. One night the mare had been stolen. After hunting and searching the whole place they sat down on the high road and said to one another:—"Let us guess who could have stolen the mare." Said the eldest:—"It seems to me as though a middle sized man had done it." "If he is middle sized then he has also a blond beard," said the next one, and the youngest added:—"If he has a blond beard, then it is Mussa."

So they hunted up Mussa. They walked from village to village, many a day, but nowhere was anybody by the name of Mussa to be found. Thus they came into a large city. While loitering about in the crowded market, viewing the beautiful goods heaped up round about, they heard a merchant call somebody across the street:—"Come over, neighbor Mussa, and have a cup of coffee!"

Curiously they stopped and saw a middle sized man with a blond beard walk across the street. "Ha, that must be he!" they whispered to one another. Then they went after him. When he was seated in his friend's shop they first politely inquired after his health and then they asked him to return the stolen mare, for they needed it very badly. The man, whose name was Mussa and who was a well to do merchant, replied he knew nothing of their horse. The loud talking drew all the neighbors into the shop, who also testified that Mussa was an honest man. But the lads insisted on what they said and since Mussa kept denying it they went to the Kadi. They told their request. For a while the Kadi said nothing, but silently stroked his long beard, and finally he asked:—"How did you find out that Mussa is the thief?" They replied, "It seems so to us!" The Kadi again did some thinking, looked at the brothers scrutinizingly and said, "Come to-night to my house and have supper with me."

So they went. All sorts of good dishes were served to them and while eating the meal with great deliberation the eldest said:—"Never have I tasted such good bread; the wheat of it has surely grown upon a field near the church."

The middle one smacked his lips and said:—"And now this roasted lamb! It is as delicious as though a pig had sucked it!" "Do you think so?" asked the youngest. "Now if it is as you say then the Kadi is the son of an Effendi."

The Kadi in the adjoining room heard every word the peasants had said and was greatly astonished. He put into one pocket of his coat a lemon and into the other an egg and went into the guests' room. He said:—"Since you are so fond of guessing, tell me what have I in my pocket." The eldest answered quickly:—"Whatever it may be it is certainly round." "If it is round," continued the middle one, "it is surely yellow." "Yellow?" asked the youngest. "Then it can be only a lemon." In a similar way they also guessed the egg in the left pocket. Now about that the Kadi was even more astonished.

Early in the morning he sent messengers to his farm to fetch the workmen. Immediately they had to tell him where the wheat had grown of which his bread was made. They said upon the field nearest the church, where the best wheat of the whole place grows. Then he inquired where the lamb had been fed which was sent to him last. Now about that the workmen seemed to be rather embarrassed, but said it was fed like the rest of them. Of course the Kadi knew at once there was something the matter with that lamb. He summoned them to tell the truth, and as they were a bit afraid of their master they finally did. Well, there was a Christian in the neighborhood of the Kadi's farm who had a herd of pigs. One day the lamb ran over to the pigs and mixed among the farrows—that's how it was.

After that the Kadi ran to his mother. "Listen," he said to her; "tell me, who was my father?" Crying, the woman replied:—"Why do you shout like that? Your father was an Effendi, my first husband, a scholar, as you are one"——"Good," the Kadi said, "but what was his name, and why didn't you tell me so before? Say it quickly!" So the frightened woman told his real name, and because she had used up the money left from her husband for his son she made him believe that her second husband was his father.

Greatly abashed the Kadi now proceeded to the merchant. In front of the shop quietly sat the three lads, waiting to see how matters were going to turn out for them. "It does not help you any," said the Kadi to Mussa; "just hand out the mare!" Then Mussa led them all into his stable, where there was standing a long row of horses, and said, downcast, "Well, then, I'll rather blush once than grow pale a hundred times. One day when driving on the high road a horse which had been grazing near by on the lawn joined us, and—why should I make many words?—we just saddled it. Here is your mare. I will return it to you, laden with goods."

And so it was. Thus the three brothers contentedly left the place. The Kadi and Mussa the merchant returned to the shop and for a long time remained silently sitting together, drinking one cup of coffee after the other, and thoughtfully stroking their long beards.

Soap That is Best for the Baby's Bath

Baby's skin is very sensitive to soap; some soaps soothe and nourish, while others inflame and irritate.

It is of the utmost importance that you know what soap to use, and to do this you must know what is in the soap.

So let us explain how we make Infants' Delight. We first go for pure vegetable oil to France. There we pay often double what we might pay. But the oil we get is pure enough to use on your table.

Then we go more than 12,000 miles to the isle of Ceylon for pure cocoanut oil. Both oils are carefully tested by chemists and doubly boiled.

Next they go through our own special milling process and fall like flakes of snow into enormous bins. Then they are crushed under a weight of 30 tons to press out the moisture.

● Finally they pass through granite rollers and come out in miles of silky ribbons. Then they are dried eight times and stamped into oval cakes that just fit the hand.

Isn't it worth while to have soap like this for your baby? Why risk using common soaps when this excellent kind costs no more than others?

This lovely soap leaves the baby's delicate skin as soft as velvet and as smooth as silk. Even the baby knows the difference in this delightful soap—so we call it Infants' Delight.

Baby will like the perfume too. It is so dainty and fragrant—only the exquisite scent of the rose. If this soap is pure enough for the baby's skin it surely is best for your own. Try one cake—you owe it to baby and yourself.

How to Bathe the Baby

Rinse the body with clear, warm water and then rub in a rich lather of Infants' Delight. Then rinse off the lather with a cloth dipped in lukewarm water and wrung out over the skin. Pat the baby's skin dry with a cloth but never rub with a towel for it coarsens the texture of the skin.

WANT ROAD BUT CITIZENS DO NOT FAVOR THE LOCATION

Attempt Will be Made to Have Grain Route Connect With Main Line of C.P.R. West of City--C.P.R. Representatives at Meeting to Discuss Proposition—Opinion of Citizens.

Mr. D. W. Dumble.—"We want the railway, but we do not want big engines puffing and snorting right in the heart of the city. A mistake was made in letting the other railways come in the way we did. That is valuable property in the west end and it must not be spoiled. The railway will come here all right. There is no doubt about that."

Mr. G. W. Hatton.—"I would like to see the railway come here if it is going to benefit the city. So far, however, we have not been shown that there is going to be very tangible benefits to the city. There is not going to be much good derived by having trains of grain passing through our city. It seems to me as if this new road is going to have the traffic the Trent Canal was supposed to have. I am opposed to the proposed entrance."

Mr. T. H. G. Denne—"We must have that railway for it will be a big benefit to the city. Any manufacturer will tell you that. If this is a junction point Peterborough shippers will have first call on cars. At the present time is is often difficult to get cars when you want them. That is one of the points where Toronto has an advantage over Peterborough. We must not let the chance pass."

G. Walter Green—"I would be pleased to see six or seven new railways come here. The more the better. The question, it seems to me, is whether we are sure this railway will come here after we have decided to grant them some of the things they ask for."

Mr. Vincent Eastwood.—"We want the railway, but it would not do to sacrifice the west end of the city. The railway will be there for all time to come. This fact should be considered. It seems to me that it would be a good plan to ascertain what the railway would want to come in by another route that would not be so injurious. I do not suggest a bonus, but it is possible that some arrangement might be made to have them come in another way. If it would pay the city better to give the company something to come in further west than it would to close the streets it might be well to consider some proposition of that kind."

Mr. William Langford.—"It would be a mistake to have railway yards in the centre of the city as would be the case if the water-front was used for such a purpose. They should be kept further out."

Mr. Geo. May, councillor for North Monaghan.—"I would like to see the railway come to Peterborough although it is too bad to see property injured. I am sorry North Monaghan is not taking more interest in the matter."

W. C. Austin—"I can't see any particular benefit in the new line coming here. There may be but it has not been clearly outlined yet. If the company was bringing its car shops, etc., here it would be a different proposition. The city should be very careful."

The above were some opinions expressed by leading citizens at the meeting of the city council last night when the proposition of the C.P.R. regarding the entrance of the Georgian Bay and Seaboard railway was discussed. The C.P.R. was represented by Mr. Jas. Oberne, general manager, and Mr. J. G. Sullivan, general superintendent of construction. They were present at the request of Mayor Rush, who asked Mr. Leonard to come himself or send some one fully conversant with the project. The meeting lasted for two hours and resulted in the dissemination of much information concerning the plans of the C.P.R. and the feeling of the citizens of Peterborough regarding the proposed entrance. It is plain that the property owners in the west end do not want the railway entering the city as proposed, and they will likely oppose the scheme energetically.

On the other hand, the opinion is general that Peterborough should be the junction point.

As a result of last night's meeting the C.P.R. will send one of their engineers to Peterborough, and will endeavor to ascertain if a suitable route cannot be found to have the grain route connect with the main line a mile or two west of the city. City Engineer Hay stated that he thought there was a suitable route west of the city, and he will act with the C.P.R.'s engineer in an attempt to locate it. Mr. Hay was one of the engineers employed by the Grand Trunk in surveying for the "Missing Link" line about twenty-five years ago, and he stated that he thought they had then come across a route which might be used by the C.P.R. at the present time.

Mr. Sullivan said he would be very glad to get into the city any other way that was feasible, provided the cost was not too great, and he would be pleased to act with the city in trying to find another route. He knew, however, that to connect with the main line west of Peterborough would mean four or five miles of a longer haul, and this would have to be considered in coming to a decision.

Mr. Oberne stated at the outset that it would be somewhat cheaper for the new line to connect at Havelock instead of Peterborough but the company wanted to come to this city on account of its greater importance. He considered that the company had made an excellent proposition to Peterborough. He doubted if any city had ever been offered a more liberal proposition by any railway. The proposition was not onerous to the city. All that was asked was permission to close a few streets and the handing over of a piece of barren property—the waterfront—which was not of any use to the city at the present time. The company would have to spend a large sum of money for filling in before it would be of any value to them. The closing of the streets, Mr. Oberne contended, would impose no hardships. The company would compensate all property owners who would suffer damages from the presence of the railway. Subways would also be put in where advisable, and the company would do everything possible to make the inconvenience to the city as little as possible. The water-front was required for freight yards as there would be a large increase in the amount of freight traffic here on account of Peterborough being the junction point.

Mr. Sullivan, the construction superintendent, said that the interests of the city and railway company were generally mutual. The company wanted the city's business and the city would benefit by the railway. Regarding the selection of Peterborough or Havelock as the junction point, Mr. Sullivan stated that to go direct to Havelock would be about one and a half miles shorter. If the connection were made at Peterborough the main line between Peterborough and Havelock would have to be double-tracked. It was not the intention to do this for a good many years if the junction point was not at Peterborough. The cost of this double-tracking would have to be added to the estimate of the Peterborough proposition. Th[illegible]rence in grades, so that altogether the Peterborough junction line would cost between $150,000 and $500,000 more than the direct line from Victoria Harbor to Havelock.

Mr. Sullivan, with the aid of the plan prepared by the C.P.R., outlined the entrance of the road to Peterborough. It would cross the Grand Trunk about two miles west of the city and would enter the city limits on the line between Smith township and the city, (Smith street) and would cross the following streets:—Bonaccord, Cordach avenue, McDonnel, Walnut, Cedar, Elm, Weller and Homewood avenue. The company asked that all these streets, except McDonnel street and Homewood avenue, be closed, and that Weller street be diverted. At Homewood avenue the line swings west into North Monaghan and runs south for some distance, south of the boundary line. The line again enters the city limits south of Chamberlain street and will join the C.P.R. main line near Parnell street. The company suggests closing Chamberlain, Park, Rink and Stewart sts. The present was the time to settle all matters regarding the closing of streets and crossings. If it was left till after the road was built there would be no end of trouble. The Monaghan road would have to be diverted for some distance and it was the intention of the company to put in a subway at Homewood avenue, another where the road re-enters the city in the south end and another at Park street, west of the present station. The grade of the railway would be high at the points mentioned and the streets can go under it without any difficulty. Mr. Sullivan considered that Peterborough had an unusually large number of streets and that no inconvenience would be caused if a few of them were closed.

Mr. Dumble was averse to having the railway cutting up the property in the west end. He was not effected personally but the property was valuable as a residential section and it would be disfigured by the railway cuts and embankments.

Mr. Oberne again took up the question and pointed out the benefit that would accrue to shippers by having the freight sheds at the waterfront. It meant a short haul for the carters and would be very convenient. The railway company was not asking the city for any money and the speaker considered the proposition a very fair one. It was not essential for the line to come to Peterborough. He did not mean this as a threat, however.

Ald. Morgan asked what benefit the grain route would be to Peterborough.

Mr. Sullivan said it would place Peterborough on a direct line to the Canadian west, which was something very desirable. A large amount of money would be left here during the construction of the road and the improved shipping facilities would be of assistance in securing new industries.

Mr. Robert Neill asked if the new line was merely a grain route and was informed that passenger trains would be put on in time.

In answer to a question Mr. Oberne stated that fifteen miles of the railway were already built, from Victoria Harbor to Coldwater.

There was some more discussion on various points and Mr. Sullivan promised to send an engineer to try and find a new route west of the city.

A vote of thanks was tendered the C.P.R. representatives on motion of Ald. Morrow and Ald. Phelan.

ACCOMPLISHED YOUNG PIANIST WILL STUDY IN GERMANY

Miss Gladys Seward, Peterborough's accomplished young pianist, left today for New York and from there will sail for Dresden, Germany, to study piano under Mr. Harry Field, the eminent Canadian master, who will be remembered as having been in charge of the piano department of the Peterborough Conservatory of Music, now at Dresden.

Miss Seward will be joined at Hamilton by her brother, Mr. Arthur Seward, who will accompany her as far as New York. At New York she will be met by Mrs. Harold Jarvis, who will leave with her for Germany on Friday or Saturday.

Miss Seward is a pupil of Mrs. Alice Roger Collins, for a number of years on the local Conservatory staff, and has made most encouraging progress and shown great talent and aptitude. She is a daughter of that gifted musician, the late Louis Seward, of this city, and her friends predict a splendid future for the brilliant young artist.

WILL NOT DOUBLE-TRACK PETERBORO'-TORONTO LINE

Mr. J. G. Sullivan, superintendent of construction of the C. P. R., announced at the meeting last night that it was extremely improbable that the C.P.R. will be double-tracked between Peterborough and Toronto for many years to come. "It may be double-tracked sometime," he said, "but hardly within twenty-five years."

Mr. Sullivan also stated that the company had no intention of making Peterborough the end of the division and removing the shops from Havelock to this city.

TWO NEW MARCHES COMPOSED BY MR. RUPERT GLIDDON

Will Be Played at Opening Concert of Winter Series to be Given by 57th Regimental Band—The Band Rehearsing an Attractive Programme.

It is expected that the opening concert of a winter series to be given by the 57th Regimental Band will take place within a couple of weeks. The band is preparing an excellent programme, four numbers of which will be the beautiful 'Masaniello' overture, a grand patriotic selection, 'Under the British Flag,' and two new marches written by Mr. Gliddon, the conductor of the band.

One of the marches is the '57th Regiment,' and is dedicated by the composer to Lieut.-Col. Stevenson and the officers of the regiment. Both marches have been rehearsed by the band and the bandsmen are quite enthusiastic over their possibilities. They are tunefully attractive and should prove popular selections.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

THE PROPOSED RAILWAY

The live question at the present moment before the ratepayers of Peterborough and the citizens generally is the suggested or proposed entrance of the C.P.R. from the Georgian Bay district. Without definitely committing themselves to a final decision in the matter, it is possible for the citizens to review a subject of such importance in such a way as to lead up to an intelligent conclusion in the near futre.

The railway will sweep round the curve of the quarry hill on the flats alongside of the present G.T.R. line. That large district lying by and southerly to this point will at once come into use as factory-sites. At present its prospects are residential only, and therefore remote. As a matter of fact a railway could not enter Peterborough and do less damage than this one proposes to do. To get into the city at all it must spoil pretty spots and run through desirable localities. So that we must choose between one thing and the other. Due compensation is made, and although the shriek of the whistle and the rattle of the car-wheels are not things calculated to promote domestic quiet, they are the necessary adjuncts of a busy life in a busy city. If we want business we must have them. Then the company proposes to put subways at the three most dangerous points. This will render life no less secure than at present. As for the river flats off Water street it may be safely said that the were intended for just such a purpose, and it matters little whether they are employed for one commercial purpose or another, so long as they are so employed. Some of the frontier towns complain of the distance away from them of their railways. Oshawa can never grow, seriously speaking, handicapped as it is. Hence a railway station and yards at our doors is what we most want.

To would save the company a million or so to go to Havelock because of the route, but they would lose our business, and they think, evidently, that it will be considerable. We have been too long cut off from the north. Here's our chance.

Now, then for the reverside side of the case. The entrance of this railway will change our whole residential system in the west and south-west parts of the city along the boundary. But there are other places to go to and plenty, where railways cannot get at residents. These places are numerous, accessible and inexpensive. It looks like the acceptance of this position. When we get as large as Toronto we can afford to be critical or careless, but not yet. The more we look at the present preposition the more we like it. It has many great advantages, and few insurmountable disadvantages. It will develop business immensely, and if so, it is cheap at any price.

TRAMP ARRESTED FOR BEGGING

Annoyed the Residents on Mark St.—Remanded Until Friday

The police have been doing great business in tramps during the past few days but the city is not receiving very much in the way of greenbacks. This morning a resident of Mark street, Ashburnham, called up the police station with the news that a hungry tramp was operating on Mark street, much to the annoyance of the residents. P. C. McHarry went over and arrested the man and when he appeared before the magistrate he gave his name as John Jones, which sounds rather fishy. He stated that he only arrived here last night from Toronto, and had not been begging from anybody. His case was enlarged until Friday morning.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

CHAMPIONSHIP WILL BE DECIDED AT HAVELOCK ON FRIDAY AFTERNOON

Havelock, Oct. 13.—The last great battle for supremacy in the intermediate football series for Ontario will take place here on Friday afternoon of this week, Oct. 15, when Brussels and Havelock will meet in the greatest contests that has taken place in this town in a long time.

Havelock went to Brussels last week and in a very fast and exciting game Brussels were able to tally one goal, doing it, however, on a foul, and the Havelock team forthwith entered a protest which may make the game a no-score one.

Thus with both teams about on an equal footing and both confident of landing the football championship of Ontario, it will certainly be a battle royal from start to finish.

Havelock, after their trial with Brussels last week, think they will be able to turn the tables and win out on the round.

All Havelock are very enthusiastic over football matters, and there will certainly be a crowd out to see the game. In order that everyone may have a chance to take in this important event, Havelock will hold their Civic Holiday on Friday afternoon.

Havelock will make no changes in their team and the same old reliables will line up on Friday afternoon to do battle for their town.

DETAILS OF SEVERAL DEALS WITH A STOLEN BICYCLE

The details of several deals with a bicycle were told in the police court this morning, but the case of Walter Mahaffey, who is charged with stealing the machine, was enlarged for one week, to enable the authorities to find out, if possible, the rightful owner. The number of the bicycle is 19404, and at one time was a "Brantford." It has been roughly handled, by all appearances, and would bring about $1.15 if put up for auction.

County Crown Attorney R. E. Wood conducted the prosecution this morning.

Constable Tom Millen, of Millbrook, testified to having recovered the wheel at Percy Haddon's house in Millbrook last Friday. Haddon said he did not know the wheel was a stolen one when he bought it from Mahaffy. He paid $5 for it, although the price asked for by Mahaffy was $10.

Percy Haddon's evidence was to the effect that he bought the wheel in 1907 from Mahaffey for $2.00 and a stereoscope and a number of views. Shortly afterwards he traded the bicycle to Norman Bruce for a watch. Bruce traded it back to his (Haddon's) brother. The wheel was painted black and the nameplate was on it when Norman Bruce got it. Mahaffey did not say where he got the machine, but one month ago his grandfather said it was a stolen one. Shortly afterwards he had advised Bruce not to ride the bicycle to Peterborough.

Robert Mahaffey, father of the prisoner, said his boy had a bicycle two years ago. He got it in exchange for a watch. Later he (witness) made a deal at a bicycle store and gave his boy's machine and $15 for another one. He never saw the wheel produced in court before. The boy did not have any other wheel as far as he could say, but he admitted that the prisoner had been accused of stealing before. One time he had been arrested in Smith for that offence.

Norman Bruce said he didn't know the prisoner, but he identified the bicycle as the one formerly owned by him. He had traded wheels with Percy Haddon, who said that he secured his machine from a cousin in Toronto, paying $10 for it. He painted the wheel its present color.

Percy Haddon, recalled, denied having stated to Bruce that he got the wheel in Toronto, and also the statement that Bruce had traded with him the second time.

Norman Bruce, recalled, said he had traded the bicycle back to the former witness. The plate was off when he got it.

Walter Bruce said he saw the first exchange between Percy Haddon and Norman Bruce. The first he heard of the wheel being stolen was when Haddon's grandfather said there was something wrong. His brother had the wheel then and he got the number and came up to Peterborough to see the chief of police.

Mr. F. R. J. McPherson said he could not say the wheel had been formerly owned by him, although if given a short time he might, by looking through his books, find out the name of the person to whom it had been sold.

The crown attorney asked that the case be enlarged and this was done.

RETURNED AND GAVE HIMSELF UP

Youth Who Was Implicated in theft of Gold Watch in the Toils at Last

One of the gang of youths who was implicated in the theft of a gold watch and $5 from the residence of John Landry, Bethune street, on June 9th, and who left the city before he could be arrested, returned to his home last night and gave himself up. This morning at the Police Court he elected to be tried summarily and he pleaded not guilty. He was remanded until Monday morning and the request of his mother that he be allowed out on her promise that he would appear for his hearing, was not granted.

EVENING OF PROFIT AND ENTERTAINMENT

Mr G. Parry Jenkins Addressed Local Astronomical Society—Proved an Interesting Speaker

Mr. C. Parry Jenkins, F.R.A.S., of Hamilton, was the speaker last evening at the regular fortnightly meeting of the Royal Astronomical Society at the Collegiate Institute.

This being the first lecture of the fall term, Mr. Jenkins was invited to address the society, not only because of his eminence in astronomical research, but also on account of the fact that he holds the position of President in the Hamilton Centre, thereby permitting of an exchange of courtesy between the two organizations.

Mr. Jenkins more than sustained his reputation as a popular lecturer. With a broad and a deep knowledge of his subject, combined with a very pleasing address and choice diction, he held the attention of his large audience firmly from beginning to end. Not only was he instructive, but through the assistance of a very fine set of lantern views under the management of Mr. H. O. Fisk, his lecture was more of an entertainment.

In introducing the speaker for the evening, Dr. Marsh referred to the fact that Mr. Jenkins had attained great honors in England before coming to this country. Through original research he had been granted the great honor of "Fellow" of the Royal Astronomical Society of England, being the highest honor obtainable.

Mr. Jenkins, in opening his lecture, referred to the present polar controversy, and to give an intelligent conception of the conditions in such northerly latitudes presented a number of very fine views of the expedition sent by the Canadian Government in 1905 to Labrador to observe the total eclipse of the sun. The views showed the equipment of the expedition and the eminent astronomers selected by the Government to handle the same. There was proof positive that eminence in scientific work meant "coats off" sometimes at least, for here were Prof. Maunder, of Greenwich; Dr. King, of Ottawa Observatory; Prof. Chant, Dr. Marsh, Mr. Jenkins and the rest photographed at manual labor.

The Indians of the far north were greatly interested in the equipment of the expedition but nothing so puzzled them as the fact that the white man was able to make stone. They saw the concrete in its plastic state, and later they were able to inspect the resulting pillar of stone. They were simply astounded.

The lecture proper was directed to the subject of Nebulae and Star Clusters, and gave the latest and most generally accepted theories of the formation of the solar systems. In terms almost devoid of technicalities, the speaker presented this great subject so that everyone could thoroughly grasp it.

To the naked eye but two nebulae are visible—one in the constellation Orion and one in Andromeda. But the telescope has found up to the present about 120,000 of these great masses in the heavens. What are they? They are great clouds of burning gaseous matter which, like steam in process of time, condenses and forms a sun.

Starting with two of the great nebulae which apparently "are without shape and void" in accordance with Biblical terms photographs were shown of nebulae in various degrees of development, their spiral shape proving conclusively that they were in motion and in some cases had thrown off rings which had formed worlds and would in time form a "solar system" such as ours. Over 65,000 of the known nebulae are of this spiral shape and in such stages of transition that the proof of the matter is quite beyond question.

To further prove the nebulous condition the spectroscope is called into use. This wonderful instrument takes a ray of light from any star or a nebula and analyses it as a chemist might a grain of metal in his laboratory. The analysis of such spectrum conclusively proves the gaseous condition of a nebula and also the solid or condensed condition of a similar nebula in process of ageing.

At the conclusion of the lecture Rev. G. W. Henderson eulogized the speaker for his very able discourse and noted with pleasure that he had throughout his lecture indicated the hand of God in the workshop of the Almighty, and thus had given testimony to his firm Christian belief. Mr. Henderson, after further commenting on the eminence of the speaker for the evening, and on the elevating and educative influence of the address, moved a resolution of thanks, which, seconded by Mr. H. B. Collier, was presented to Mr. Jenkins.

Judging from the well filled lecture room and the influx of new members, the Astronomical Society have very bright prospects of a successful future.

It was announced that the next meeting on the 26th of October would be of a slightly tangent nature from the usual, being an illustrated travel talk, "In the Carribbean Sea." With some 75 lantern slides the evening will doubtless prove a most interesting one.

They are not "CATSPAW" Rubber Heels unless they are made with a Canvas Friction Non-Slip plug. Take no chances, insist upon having "CATSPAW." All dealers and repairers.

CLIMBING UP MOUNT ROBSON

In a letter received by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway from the Rev. George Kinney, of Keremeos, B.C., who made a successful ascent of Mount Robson, the highest peak on the Canadian Rockies, and which fact was chronicled some days ago, he says:

"You are already aware of the value of this wonderful mountain to your road. Our party was one of the first to ever visit the mountain. The last three summers have been spent by me in this work and my discoveries are quite important. I have no hesitation in emphatically stating that from the scenic standpoint Mount Robson and vicinity is without a peer. Nothing in the Rockies or Selkirks can touch this one beauty spot. Forest-fringed Emerald Lake, Berg Lake, with its icebergs floating at all times on its surface, countless glaciers and towering crags and its 'Valley of 1,000 Falls' are but a few of the interesting features of this superb mountain."

Canon Davidson's confirmation class will meet to-night at 8 o'clock in the vestry of St. John's.

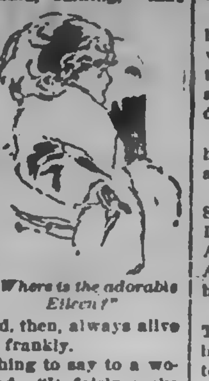
THE YOUNGER SET

Author of
"The Fighting Chance."

"Was she? Curious I didn't see her. They say," she said, smiling, "that some very heavy play goes on in that cunning little new house of yours, Mr. Lansing."



"Where is the adorable Eileen?"

"Really?" he asked blandly.

"Yes, and I'm wondering if it is true."

"I shouldn't think you'd care, Mrs. Fane, as long as it makes a good story."

Rosamund flushed, then, always alive to humor, laughed frankly.

"What a nasty thing to say to a woman!" she observed. "It fairly reeks impertinence. Mr. Lansing, you don't like me very well, do you?"

"I dare not," he said, "because you are married. If you were only free, a vinculo matrimonii"—

Rosamund laughed again and sat stroking her muff and smiling. "Curious, isn't it," she said to Nina, "the inborn antipathy of two agreeable human bipeds for one another?" And again to Nina: "Dear, have you heard anything about Alixe Ruthven? I think it is the strangest thing that nobody seems to know where she is. And all anybody can get out of Jack is that she's in a nerve factory or some such retreat and a perfect wreck. She might as well be dead, you know."

"In that case," observed Lansing, "it might be best to shift the center of gossip. De mortuis nil nisi bonum, which is simple enough for any body to comprehend."

"That is rude, Mr. Lansing," flashed out Rosamund, and to his astonishment he saw the tears start to her eyes.

"I beg your pardon," he said sulkily.

"You do well to. I care more for Alixe Ruthven than—than you give me credit for caring about anybody. People are never wholly worthless, Mr. Lansing—only the very young think that."

Boots said respectfully: "I am sorry for what I said, Mrs. Fane. I hope that your friend Mrs. Ruthven will soon recover."

Rosamund looked at Nina, the tears still rimming her lids. "I miss her frightfully," she said. "If somebody would only tell me where she is—I—I know it could do no harm for me to see her. I can be as gentle and loyal as anybody—when I really care for a person. Do you know where she might be, Nina?"

"I? No, I do not. I'd tell you if I did, Rosamund."

"Don't you know?"

"Why, no," said Nina, surprised at her persistence.

"Because," continued Rosamund, "your brother does."

Nina straightened up, flushed and astonished.

"Why do you say that?" she asked.

"Because he does know. He sent her to Clifton. The maid who accompanied her is in my service now. It's a low way of finding out things, but we all do it."

"He—sent Alixe to—to Clifton!" repeated Nina incredulously. "Your maid told you that?"

Rosamund finished the contents of her slim glass and rose. "Yes, and it was a brave and generous and loyal thing for him to do. I care for Alixe, and I honor your brother for what he did."

She stood with pretty golden head bent, absently arranging the sables around her neck and shoulders.

"I have been very horrid to Captain Selwyn," she said quietly. "Tell him I am sorry, that he has my respect. And—if he cares to tell me where Alixe is I shall be grateful and do no harm."

"Good night," said Boots to Nina. Then he took Rosamund down to her brougham with a silent formality that touched her present sentimental mood.

She leaned from her carriage window, looking at him where he stood, hat in hand, in the thickly falling snow.

"Please—without ceremony, Mr. Lansing," and as he covered himself, "May I not drop you at your destination?"

"Thank you," in refusal.

"I thank you for being nice to me. Please believe there is often less malice than perversity in me. I—I have a heart, Mr. Lansing—such as it is. And often those I torment most I care for most. It was so with Alixe. Good-by."

Boots' salute was admirably formal. Then he went on through the thickening snow, swung vigorously across the avenue to the park wall and, turning south, continued on parallel to it under the naked trees.

Now he began to understand something of the strange effacement of his friend Selwyn. He began to comprehend the curious economies practiced, the continued absence from club and coterie, the choice of the sordid lodging whither Boots, one night, seeing him on the street by chance, had shamelessly tracked him, with no excuse for the intrusion save his affection for this man and his secret doubts of the man's ability to take care of himself and his occult affairs.

Into the doorway of Selwyn's lodgings Lansing turned. When the town was young a Lansing had lived there in pomp and circumstance—his own great-grandfather—and he smiled grimly, amused at the irony of things terrestrial.

A slattern at the door halted him.

"Nobody ain't let up them stairs without my knowin' why," she mumbled.

"I want to see Captain Selwyn," he explained.

"Hey?"

"Captain Selwyn!"

"Hey? I'm a little deef!" screeched the old crone. "Is it Cap'n Selwyn you want?"

Above, Selwyn, hearing his name screamed through the shadows of the ancient house, came to the stair well and looked down into the blackness.

"Nobody ain't let up them stairs."

"What is it, Mrs. Glodden?" he said sharply; then, catching sight of a dim figure springing up the stairs: "Here, this way! Is it for me?" and as Boots came into the light from his open door, "Oh," he whispered, deadly pale under the reaction, "I thought it was a telegram! Come in. I don't know how you came to stumble in here, Boots," he said, "but I'm glad to see you. I—it's not much of a place," forcing a smile. "However, you see I'm so seldom in town. I'm busy at the Hook, you know, so I don't require anything elaborate."

"How are things, Phil?"

"All right. First rate, thank you."

Boots removed the pipe from his lips and swore at him, and Selwyn listened with head obstinately lowered and lean hands plucking at his frayed girdle. And when Boots had ended his observations with an emphatic question Selwyn shook his head.

"No, Boots. You're very good to ask me to stop with you, but I can't. I'd be hampered. There are matters, affairs that concern me, that need instant attention at times—at certain times I must be free to go, free to come. I couldn't be in your house. Don't ask me. There are telegrams—unexpected ones—at all hours."

"What of it?"

"You don't understand."

"Wait a bit! How do you know I don't? Do the telegrams come from Sandy Hook?"

"No."

Boots looked him calmly in the eye. "Then I do understand, old man. Come on out of this, in heaven's name! Come, now! Get your dressing gown off and your coat on! Don't you think I understand? I tell you I do! Yes, the whole blessed, illogical, chivalrous business. Never mind how I know, for I won't tell you. Oh, I'm not trying to interfere with you. I know enough to shun buzzsaws. All I want is for you to come and take that big back room and help a fellow live in a lonely house, help a man to make it cheerful. I can't stand it alone any longer, and it will be four years before Drina is eighteen."

"Drina!" repeated Selwyn blankly, then he laughed. It was genuine laughter, too, and Boots grinned and puffed at his pipe and recrossed his legs, watching Selwyn out of eyes brightening with expectancy.

"Then it's settled," he said.

"What? Your ultimate career with Drina?"

"Oh, yes; that also. But I refer to your coming to live with me."

"Boots"—

"Oh, fizz! Come on. I don't like the way you act, Phil."

Selwyn said slowly, "Do you make it a personal matter?"

"Yes, I do."

So Selwyn stood up and began to remove his dressing gown, and Lansing dragged out the little flat trunk and began to pack it.

An hour later they went away together through the falling snow.

For a week Boots let him alone. He had a big, comfortable room, dressing closet and bath adjoining the suit occupied by his host. He was absolutely free to go and come, and for a week or ten days Boots scarcely laid eyes on him except at breakfast, for Selwyn's visits to Sandy Hook became a daily routine except when a telegram arrived from Edgewater calling him there.

Chapter 25

MATTERS at Edgewater were beginning to be easier in one way for Selwyn. Alixe appeared to forget him for days at a time. She was less irritable, less restless and exacting.

"Yesterday," said Miss Casson, one of the nurses, in a letter to Selwyn, "there was a consultation here between Drs. Vail, Wesson and Morrison, as you requested. They have not changed their opinions—indeed, they are convinced that there is no possible chance of the recovery you hoped for when you talked with Dr. Morrison. They all agree that Mrs. Ruthven is in excellent physical condition—young, strong, vigorous—and may live for years, may outlive us all, but there is nothing else to expect."

The letter ran on:

"I am inclosing the bills you desired to have sent you. Fuel is very expensive, as you will see. The items for fruits, too, seem unreasonably large, but grapes are $2 a pound and fresh vegetables dreadfully expensive.

"I meant to thank you for sending me the revolver and cartridges. It seemed a silly request, but we are in a rather lonely place, and I think Miss Bond and I feel a little safer knowing that in case of necessity we have something to frighten away any roaming intruder who might take it into his head to visit us.

"One thing we must be careful about. Yesterday Mrs. Ruthven had a doll on my bed, and I sat sewing by the window, not noticing what she was doing until I heard her pretty, pathetic little laugh.

"And what do you think she had done? She had discovered your revolver under my pillow, and she had tied her handkerchief around it and was using it as a doll!

"I got it away with a little persuasion, but at times she still asks for her 'army' doll, saying that a boy she knew named Philip had sent it to her from Manila, where he was living."

Selwyn read this letter sitting before the fire in the living room, feet on the fender, pipe between his teeth. It was the first day of absolute rest he had had in a long while.

The day before he had been at the Hook until almost dark, watching the firing of a big gun, and the results had been so satisfactory that he was venturing to give himself a holiday unless wanted at Edgewater.

He had seen Eileen seldom that winter. When he had seen her their relations appeared to be as happy, as friendly as before. There was no apparent constraint, nothing from her to indicate that she noticed an absence for which his continual business with the government seemed sufficient excuse.

Besides, her days were full days, consequent upon Nina's goading and indefatigable activity. Selwyn, unable longer to fulfill his social obligations, was being quietly eliminated from the social scheme of things.

Gerald in the early days of an affair with Gladys and before even it had assumed the proportions of an affair had shyly come to Selwyn, not for confession, but with the crafty purpose of introducing her name into the conversation so that he might have the luxury of talking about her to somebody who would neither quiz him nor suspect him.

Selwyn, of course, ultimately suspected him, but as he never quizzed him Gerald continued his elaborate system of subterfuges to make her personality and doings a topic for him to expand upon and Selwyn to listen to.

It had amused Selwyn. He thought of it now—a gay memory like a ray of light flung for a moment across the somber background of his own sadness. Fortunate or unfortunate, Gerald was still lucky in his freedom to hazard it with chance and fate. Selwyn's dull eyes rested upon the ashes of the fire, and he saw his dead youth among them and in the flames his maturity burning to embers.

If he outlived Alixe his life would lie as the ashes lay at his feet. If she outlived him—and they had told him there was every chance of it—at least he would have something to busy himself with in life if he was to leave her provided for when he was no longer there to stand between her and charity. As he lay there in his chair, the unlighted pipe drooping in his hands, the telephone on the desk rang, and he rose and unhooked the receiver.

Drina's voice sounded afar, and "Hello, sweetheart," he said gayly. "Is there anything I can do for your youthful highness?"

"I've been talking over the phone to Boots," she said. "You know, whenever I have nothing to do I call up Boots at his office and talk to him."

"That must please him," suggested Selwyn gravely.

"It does. Boots says you are not going to business today, so I thought I'd call you up."

"Thank you," said Selwyn.

"You are welcome. What are you doing over there in Boots' house?"

"Looking at the fire, Drina, and listening to the purring of three fat tabby cats."

"Oh, mother and Eileen have gone somewhere. I haven't anything to do for an hour. Can't you come around?"

"Why, yes, if you want me."

"Yes, I do. Of course I can't have Boots, and I prefer you next."

The child was glad to see him and expressed herself so, coming across to the chair where he sat and leaning against him, one arm on his shoulder.

"Do you know," she said, "that I miss you ever so much? Do you know also that I am nearly fourteen and that there is nobody in this house near enough my age to be very companionable? Uncle Philip, mother has forbidden me, and I'll tell her and take my punishment, but would you mind telling me how you first met my Aunt Alixe?"

Selwyn's arm around her relaxed, then tightened.

"Why do you ask, dear?" he said very quietly.

"I heard mother say to Eileen that you had never had a chance for happiness. I thought it was very sad. I had gone into the clothespress to play with my dolls; you know I still do play with them—that is, I go into some secret place and look at them at times when the children are not around. So I was in there, sitting on the cedar chest, and I couldn't help hearing what they said. Mother said to Eileen, 'Dearest, can't you learn to care for him?' And Eileen"—

"Drina," he interrupted sharply, "you must not repeat things you overhear."

"Oh, I didn't hear anything more," said the child, "because I remembered that I shouldn't listen, and I came out of the closet. Isn't it possible for you to marry anybody, Uncle Philip?"

"No, Drina."

"Not even if Eileen would marry you?"

"No."

"Why?"

"You could not understand, dear. Even your mother cannot quite understand. So we won't ever speak of it again, Drina."

"I know something that mother does not," she said. And as he betrayed no curiosity: "Eileen is in love. I heard her say so."

He straightened up sharply, turning to look at her.

"I was sleeping with her. I was still awake, and I heard her say, 'I do love you; I do love you.' She said it very softly, and I cuddled up, supposing she meant me. But she was asleep."

"She certainly meant you," said Selwyn, forcing his stiffened lips into a smile.

"No; she did not mean me."

"H-how do you know?"

"Because she said a man's name."

A few moments later her music teacher arrived, and Drina was obliged to leave him.

"If you don't wait until I have finished my music," she said, "you won't see mother and Eileen. They are coming to take me to the riding school at 4 o'clock."

Turning to go, for the house and its associations made him restless, he found himself confronting Eileen, who, in her furs and gloves, was just entering the room.

"I came up," she said. "They told me you were here, calling very formally upon Drina, if you please. What with her monopoly of you and Boots there seems to be no chance for Nina and me."

"I will stay until Nina comes, if I may," he said slowly.

"You don't look very well, Captain Selwyn. Are you?"

"Perfectly. I"—he laughed—"I am growing old; that is all."

"Do you say that to annoy me," she asked, with a disdainful shrug, "or to further impress me?"

He shook his head and touched the hair at his temples significantly.

"Pooh!" she retorted. "It is becoming—is that what you mean?"

"I hope it is. There's no reason why a man should not grow old gracefully."

"Captain Selwyn! But of course you only say it to bring out that latent temper of mine. It's about the only thing that does it too. And please don't plague me, if you've only a few moments to stay. It may amuse you to know that I, too, am exhibiting signs of increasing infirmity. My temper, if you please, is not what it once was."

"Do you know that I miss you ever so much?"

"Worse than ever?" he asked in pretended astonishment.

"Far worse. It is vicious. Kit-Ki took a nap on a new dinner gown of mine, and I slapped her. And the other day Drina hid in a clothespress while Nina was discussing my private affairs, and when the little imp emerged I could have shaken her. Oh, I am certainly becoming infirm. So if you are, too, comfort yourself with the knowledge that I am keeping pace with you through the winter of our discontent."

"I am wondering," he said in a bantering voice, "what secrets Drina heard."

"Would you like to know what Nina was saying to me?" she asked.

"I'd rather hear what you said to her. Were you laughing or weeping?"

"Perhaps I was yawning. How do you know?" she smiled.

THE REORGANIZATION OF THE PROVINCIAL POLICE SYSTEM

Toronto, Oct. 13.—Announcement of the reorganization of the provincial police system was made by the Government this afternoon.

Joseph Rogers, the Provincial Inspector, was made chief. The Province is to be divided into two parts, northern and southern each under a deputy. The fee system will be abolished and, trained constables appointed for each county and district in close touch with each other. Three provincial departments, License, Attorney-General and Game and Fisheries, will be represented on the Central Board so that the police may co-operate in enforcement of the law in the three branches. The scheme will mean great advance in maintaining law in order and rapidity in following up crime.

PETERBOROUGH PROTESTANT HOME HAS DONE MUCH GOOD

Reports Read at Annual Meeting—A New Shelter for the Aged Poor is an Imperative Necessity—New Matron is in Charge.

The annual meeting of the officers of the Peterborough Protestant Home was held yesterday.

The main topic for discussion was the future provision for the care of the city's poor. The members seemed inclined to the belief that the city should provide an institution for this purpose, and they were strengthened in the belief by the fact that the department and the grand jury had frequently referred to Peterborough as needing an industrial home or house of refuge, or some such institution where proper care could be taken of the poor of the city.

The Board of the Home were of one mind in the attitude toward the housing of men. They believe that their efforts should be devoted to the aged and needy women only and that the city itself should look after the men. If this were done their efforts would be much more successful, and they believe more would be accomplished.

The chair at yesterday's meeting was occupied by Mrs. Walter Roger. Rev. Robert Pogue conducted the devotional exercises.

After the minutes of the last meeting were read, Mrs. R. F. McWilliams, secretary of the Board, read her report, which was as follows;—

The opening of the fall season has brought so many applications for admission to the Home that there seems danger of its accommodation being overtaxed through the coming winter. In which case your board will be unable to decide as to their great satisfaction they were able to do last winter—accede to every application for admittance. It is therefore with keen pleasure that they notice that public interest has been aroused in the question of the proper housing of the poor. Some change it seems there must be in the coming year, since the present home of this work is now in so advanced a stage of decay that a new shelter is an imperative necessity. Your board have for some years felt handicapped by the almost complete lack of public interest and support in the maintenance and extension of this work, of making a home for the aged poor, and nothing would give them more encouragement and hope for the future than these signs of the awakening of that interest.

The past year has seen many changes in the home. Three of our inmates have died and nine have found other homes. Early in the year our assistant matron left us to assume the duties of her own home, and but a few weeks later we were called upon to mourn her untimely death.

Now at the beginning of the year we are losing our matron, Miss Lily Fraser, of whose faithful service for ten years your board find it difficult to express adequate appreciation. The best wishes of all concerned with the home go with Miss Fraser to her new life.

Our new matron, Miss Nellie Webster, of Lakefield, has already assumed her new duties.

To many who have aided in brightening the lives of the inmates, the sincere thanks of your board are given; especially to the doctors of the city, who generously gave their services to the inmates; to the various charitable and religious organizations who hold services in the home, and to the friends who by their gifts and visits testify to their sympathetic interest.

Special mention should be made of the newspapers, which have not only published all items of interest in the home, but which generously donate a copy of their daily paper.

There were in all 27 persons under our care during the past year. These were in the home for an average period of 226 1-2 days. Of this number 15 are now with us. Three other inmates will enter in the course of a few days, while other applications are pending.

It cost to maintain each inmate this year thirty cents a day, or $110 per year. This is a higher rate than the previous year, when the cost was twenty-six cents a day, or $94.00 per year. Both these rates compare favorably with other institutions. Dr. Bruce Smith gives the average cost in Houses of Refuge as 31 cents per day. It must be remembered that all these institutions have farms from which they obtain supplies, while these averages are made from the total expenditure of this Home.

M. S. McWILLIAMS.

HOT WEATHER AND CONSTIPATION.

There is a close connection between hot weather and constipation. People do not seem to understand this, and even doctors are slow in comprehending it.

Constipation depends mainly on dryness of the bowels. During the hot weather the fluids of the body are drained away in perspiration. Unless considerable extra fluid is drunk, the internal organs are deprived of their usual amount of fluid. The fluids usually used by the bowels to keep the contents moist, are absorbed into the blood and evaporated on the surface of the body, to cool the body during the hot weather. Hence, constipation.

It is very unfortunate indeed, for any one to be obliged to take drastic cathartics to relieve constipation. Of course drastic cathartics will clean out the bowels, but the habit of constipation remains just the same. Even a little worse.

If a mild and gentle stimulant of the bowels is used, combined with a tonic that has the double effect of stimulating the natural peristaltic action of the bowels, as well as attracting to the bowels the necessary portion of fluids, if such a remedy could be devised it would be of great value to the people during the hot weather.

It is believed that Peruna comes nearer to being a perfect remedy in this particular than any other popular household remedy. Taken according to the directions on the bottle, it not only increases the appetite and gives strength to the nervous system, but it produces a slight action of the bowels, overcoming constipation without producing a cathartic action.

We are in receipt of a great many letters confirming the statements made above. One will suffice for illustration:

Mr. William Eckert, 278 North Eighteenth St., Columbus, Ohio, writes:

"I have been afflicted with chronic constipation for twenty-five years.

"About six months ago I was feeling badly, and concluded to use Peruna as a tonic. To my surprise, before I had finished the first bottle of Peruna I noted that my bowels were moving regularly, without any physic. From that time to this my constipation has disappeared. Peruna has not only built me up, but it has cured me of chronic constipation."

DOURO PRODUCES TWIN PUMPKINS

Freak of Nature Grown on Farm of Mr. A. Tedford

Double-jointed peanuts have long been in vogue but double-jointed pumpkins are something new. Of course there are certain conditions under which a man might think he saw two pumpkins where there was only one, but there is nothing like that in this case. Mr. A. Tedford, of Douro, showed the "double-header" to the Review to-day. Both parts of it are large and fully ripened and are of the same size. They are united as Siamese twins and form a rare curiosity.

The pumpkin, or pumpkins, can be seen at the Munro House.

MRS. ALLISON'S EVIDENCE AGAINST SIR FRED BORDEN

Chief Witness for Defence in Action of Minister of Justice Against Distributor of The Eye-Openers Says Sir Fred Borden Used Frequently to Stay at Her House.

Kentville, N.S., Oct. 14.—Interest in the case of Sir Frederick Borden v. Carruthers is at fever heat. Every hotel is filled and private houses are harboring commercial men and others not lucky enough to order rooms in advance.

The defendant is charged by the Minister of Militia with criminal libel in having circulated, during an election campaign, copies of The Calgary Eye-Opener, containing fac similas of two letters in which Mrs. Maria Allison of Ottawa accused Sir Frederick of misconduct.

Mrs. Allison, whose two letters, printed in The Calgary Eye-Opener, caused the charges of libel to be made, was a witness yesterday morning. The court was crowded.

To Mr. Ritchie, Mrs. Allison said her daughter went to Montreal in June, 1896, a week after Sir Frederick left her house. In the interval she had had two conversations with him. Sir Frederick went to Montreal nearly every week after her daughter went to Montreal. An attempt to introduce the conversation at this time failed. A telegram from the daughter to Sir Frederick was not admitted, due notice that it was to be submitted not having been given.

Mrs. Allison said she had seen her daughter about four times in Montreal and since then, at an interval of seven years, she had seen her in September last in Baltimore. The daughter returned to her house over Sunday and searched for the telegram a week after she (Mrs. Allison) had found it. Here again an objection was raised.

The woman whose name was left blank with The Eye-Opener did live in Ottawa on the same street she lived on. She had seen Sir Frederick with her in a cab talking with her, and the husband had made an awful row on the street when she came back to the house late at night. She had come back at half-past two in the morning in the same cab she had left in earlier in the night.

Sir Frederick went to the house sometimes. He used to stop by a broken down fence across the street, where a lot of old boxes were piled up. Sir Frederick went into the house on several occasions when the husband was away.

Mrs. Allison admitted sending the letters to Editor Edwards of The Eye-Opener. Mrs. Allison said that when she was absolutely in need, with two small children, her husband had given her nothing.

At the afternoon session Mr. Wickwire sprang a sensation when he called Miss Chalefour in rebuttal. She gave her age as 45 years. She went to Montreal, she said, on account of ill-health, and for a time was employed by the Quebec Government. Twenty years ago she left home on account of ill-health, and unsatisfactory conditions at home. She went to a friend's home, but her mother followed her there, and she left. She went to her aunt's in Toronto at one time and was taken back to Ottawa by her uncle, Mr. Graham. Her mother said nothing on her return. On a previous occasion her mother had pulled her out of bed by her hair.

Miss Chalefour said Sir Frederick Borden had never visited her at Mrs. Archambault's home, and had never had improper relations with her, and she had never had her board paid by Sir Frederick, nor had she ever been helped financially by him. She had at one time to leave her lodging-house because she could not pay her board, and she had to work hard for her money. Her position in the Quebec crown and timber office was secured through the good offices of a former boarder at her mother's house, and Hon. Mr. Parent. The last time she saw Sir Frederick Borden was eight years ago, when she met him on the street in Ottawa.

SIX DROWN IN LAKE ERIE STR. GEORGE SLOANE SINKS

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 14.—In the wreck of the steamer George Stone of Cleveland, Ohio, on Point Pelee, Ont., yesterday, Upper Lake Erie, added a gruesome chapter to the history of marine disasters on the great lakes.

Six lives were lost and twelve were saved and the tail-end of the recent gale is lashing a hopelessly disabled vessel, that was not insured and belonged to M. A. Bradley of Cleveland.

The victims who lost their lives were Paul Howell and Peter Daley of Erie, Pa., who was a passenger and friend of the captain, and six members of the crew were capsized in the surf attempting to go ashore for assistance.

Two of the crew clung to the overturned boat four hours, until they drifted ashore; six were drowned when the lifeboat capsized and the remaining ten members of the crew were taken off the wreck about noon by the steamer F. M. Osborne of Cleveland and brought to Detroit.

WAS VICTIM OF INTRIGUE

Washington, D.C., Oct. 14.—Charles R. Crane, Minister designate to China, who has been invited to resign by the Secretary of State for an alleged injudicious interview on Chinese matters, has put the matter before President Taft. He intimates that the States Department neglected to give him instructions and that he acted on Taft's advice to "give it to them red-hot."

The Chicago Record-Herald, which printed the interview complained of, says editorially that the treatment accorded Crane has been "shameful," that the "ostensible reason" for the dismissal is not the real one and that "it is perfectly apparent that he has been made the victim of what appears to have been a thoroughly discreditable intrigue."

STOP HOSPITAL MILK SUPPLY

Cobalt, Oct. 14.—Following the complaint against the T. & N.O. Commission for using a steam shovel for emergency work last Sunday, the local branch of the Lord's Day Alliance now objects to the delivery of milk to the Red Cross hospitals on Sunday.

R. P. Rogers of the Coniagas Mines, who is chairman of the hospital board, has been informed by the express company that they cannot deliver milk shipped from Toronto to Cobalt according to the alliance without being liable to prosecution. Mrs. A. E. Saunders, superintendent of the hospitals, is unable to procure a sufficient and safe milk supply, and the hospital authorities regard such action as tyrannical.

It is understood that an appeal has been made to the provincial authorities.

May Abolish Grain Certificates.

Ottawa, Oct. 14.—The Government is considering the advisability of abolishing the present system of granting certificates for grain cargoes leaving Port Arthur and Fort William.

SENTENCED TO GALLOWS

North Bay, Oct. 14.—Sam Spannelli, Italian, found guilty Tuesday of fatally stabbing a Chinaman at Haileybury, was yesterday sentenced by Justice Riddell to be hanged at North Bay on Nov. 26.

The jury in the case of Saul Gouin, charged with the murder of Carrie Russell near Cobalt, disagreed after two hours. Ten were for acquittal, one for manslaughter and one for murder.

Ethel Crawford, who had been living with the Russell woman in a shack in the woods, swore that Gouin had demanded $100 that was in the house and attacked them both with a hatchet. Russell died some months later in a Toronto hospital.

Evidence was introduced by the defence showing Gouin to have been an industrious man, of good character, and an effort was made to show that the girl's death might have resulted from other causes than the assault, arising from her dissolute life. Gouin swore that the woman tried to get money from him and threatened him with a revolver, that he became frightened, and, finding the door locked and the key gone, had picked up an axe to defend himself. He struck Crawford, after which he remembered nothing until he found himself on the road back to Cobalt, where he stayed two days and then went to work in the lumber camp, going from there to North Bay Hospital, where he was arrested. No revolver was found on the premises.

CANADIAN FRUIT IN GOOD CONDITION

London, Oct. 14.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Ontario Government exhibit of agricultural produce arrived in splendid condition, especially the peaches, which the Covent Garden fruit dealers, having seen, think there is a good market for in London. The only fault they found was with the packing, and they suggested the use of excelsior to prevent bruising of the fruit, cotton batting being conductive to too much warmth.

N. B. Colcock leaves for Canada Nov. 1, remaining two months. Joe Clark will have charge of the Ontario office during the absence of Colcock.

PRELIMINARY HEARING OF THE CHARGES AGAINST SHEPHERD

Taking Place Before Police Magistrate Dumble—J. G. M. Wilson and James Kendrey Testify That Statements Made by Robert Shepherd at the Election Trial are Untrue--R. M Waddell Called by the Defence---Shepherd Volunteered His Services to Conservatives.

The preliminary hearing of the charges of perjury against Robert H. Shepherd was commenced at the Police Court this morning before his Worship Police Magistrate Dumble. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for Shepherd and the prosecution was conducted by Crown Attorney R. E. Wood.

Adjournment was made at one o'clock for luncheon after three witnesses had been examined, J. G. M. Wilson and Jas. Kendrey, called by the Crown, and R. M. Waddell, called by the defence.

Mr. W. F. Johnston is acting as court stenographer.

After a minor assault case had been disposed of the hearing of the Shepherd charges was commenced;

The charge of J. G. M. Wilson against Shepherd was first taken up. It is to the effect that "Shepherd swore falsely and wilfully when he said that he had been engaged by the complainant and James Kendrey to pretend to be a supporter of James Stratton and to work in his committee rooms, and to sit on his committees and to get all the information that he would and to supply such information to the said Wilson and Roland Waddell. The complainant states that no arrangement or engagement was made between Shepherd and Kendrey or between any of them on the said 20th day of September nor at any time.

The other charge was laid by W. A. Brundrette and reads as follows;

"That Robert H. Shepherd was duly sworn as a witness on behalf of the petitioner, in the Burnham v. Stratton election trial and then and there upon his oath aforesaid did falsely, wilfully and corruptly upon his oath aforesaid in substance and to the effect the following that is to say;

That he, Robert H. Shepherd, had been engaged or employed by James Kendrey, John G. M. Wilson and the said Wm. A. Brundrette, to go into the Liberal Committee rooms during an election which took place for the purpose of electing a member of the House of Commons to represent the riding of West Peterborough, under false pretences and to act a false part whereas in truth and in fact the said Robert Shepherd never was employed by the said James Kendrey, John G. W. Wilson and Wm. A. Brundrette for the purposes aforesaid, nor for any other purpose at any time whereby the said Robert H. Shepherd did then and there commit wilful and corrupt perjury contrary to the provision of the criminal code."

JOHN T. GEORGE.

New York Oct. 14th.—At a salary of $10,000 a year, John T. George, who lives in a handsome residence at No. 432 North Broad street, in the fashionable section of Elizabeth, N. J., is sitting on a bench these days from early morning until the six o'clock whistle blows making leather like an ordinary tanner. He goes to work every day in his automobile, which returns in time to take him home again. Then he doffs his crude apron for evening dress and entertains his friends at dinner, just as if he were not an humble laborer.

This unique situation has been brought about by the recent absorption of the Harrington Leather Works by the Central Leather Company. When this was effected Mr. George, who had been vice-president and general manager, was informed that his services were no longer required. He had other notions on the subject, however, and presented his $10,000 contract, which does not expire until next June.

"All right," said the new head of the concern, "I guess we'll have to keep you on, but we haven't got any place for you except that of a regular tanner."

"That'll do," said Mr. George, and ever since then the town has been enjoying the spectacle of the wealthy tanner driving to and from his humble work in his luxurious car.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL RESENTS RESTRICTIONS

In Address Before Canadian Club at Winnipeg Earl Grey Says That Every Topic is Placed Out of His Reach, Because it is Polilical.

Winnipeg, Man., Oct. 14.—Speaking before the Canadian Club yesterday Earl Grey took occasion to refer to certain strictures that have been passed on him for his recent remarks at Calgary concerning naval defence. His Excellency said in part:

"Gentlemen, I must ask for your indulgence. I am in a somewhat embarrassing position. I have received warnings through the press that I must abstain from uttering even a whisper on any political subject, for fear that I may be misreported. Even if I do succeed in ordering my conversation aright, I am warned that the ignorance of a stenographer may throw me down, and that, therefore, silence is golden. With these caveats ringing loudly in my ears what am I to do?

"There is no subject affecting the well-being of Canada that is not political. If I refer to the causes of your well-being, if I urge you to have a vigilant regard to the courses of your national greatness, I shall be trespassing on forbidden ground. Well, I must do the best I can, and run the risk.

'For nearly five years I have endeavored, in my political utterances, to call the attention of the people to the importance of keeping before them high national and imperial ideals. For nearly five years I have, quite conscious of my constitutional limitations, walked the tight rope of platitudinous generalities, and I am not aware of having made any serious slip.

"His Majesty's Canadian Government appear to be very much of the same opinion, for they have paid me the usual compliment of printing, at the public cost, my answers to addresses and speeches which, inasmuch as they have dealt with politics, although in no controversial manner, shows that in their opinion I have not committed any constitutional offence.

"I will, therefore, assume that they and you desire me to continue as I have begun."

LION CHRISTENING IS DENOUNCED

Edinburgh, Oct. 14.—The christening of three baby lions at the Marine Gardens the other day by Mr. George Alexander, the well-known actor, seems likely to arouse a storm of indignation in Scottish ecclesiastical circles. The ceremony, which was performed with champagne in place of water, is variously designated "as an outrage," "a silly and somewhat profane misapplication of a Christian rite," and "a burlesque of the Christian service." Only one clergyman so far—a Free Churchman—has taken a more charitable view of the ceremony.

BOMB THROWN INTO HOTEL BAR

Woodstock, Oct. 14.—The police of Ingersoll and district are investigating a peculiar affair which took place Tuesday night in the bar of the Kinwin House.

Ald. Jas. Buchanan was in the bar, together with several others. He was lighting a cigar when, according to some, a bomb was thrown at him. Whatever it was, it exploded with terrific force, tearing away two of the fingers of his right hand, and otherwise injuring him. He was unconscious for some time.

The police are looking for a stranger who appeared at the door of the bar at about the time the explosion took place.

AT HEAD OF NEW FORCE

Detective Joseph Rogers Will be the Chief of Ontario Police.

Toronto, Oct. 14.—Mr. Joseph Rogers, head inspector of the department of criminal investigation, was appointed Chief of the Provincial Police yesterday morning and the Order-in Council was signed by the Lieutenant-Governor yesterday afternoon.

This appointment will be followed by a complete reorganization of the police system of the province, the details of which will be announced very shortly.

It is understood that the province for the purposes of ease in organization will be divided into two parts, Northern and Southern Ontario, each under a deputy. The names mentioned for these positions are Chief Main of Niagara Falls for the South, and Chief Calbeck of Cobalt for the North. These will be responsible to Mr. Rogers as chief.

CHIEF ROGERS.

The scheme, it is understood, comprises an arrangement by which there will be a close co-operation also with the License and Fish and Game Departments.

For this purpose a central board may be appointed to whom the chief would report, consisting of Mr. Cartwright, Deputy Attorney-General; Mr Ende Saunders, chief of the License Department, and Mr. Tinsley, superintendent of the Fish and Game Departments. All three departments would thus be enabled to work in harmony and the provincial police could be called out to do duty in any branch of law enforcement.

The scheme of reorganization includes the payment by salary of constables as members of the force, and will probably mean the abolition of the present fee system. Some arrangement will also be made for the training of the men. It is understood that at the first, town and city police forces will be drawn on for trained men.

Mr. Rogers, the new chief, has had a long service in the Attorney-General's Department and his experience has been a most varied one.

SPANISH SOCIAL REFORMER IS SHOT AT BARCELONA

Educator and Revolutionist is Killed in Accordance With Sentence of Court Martial—Leaders of Thought Throughout Europe Are Aroused.

Barcelona, Spain, Oct. 14.—Prof. Francesco Ferrer, the Spanish educator, and convicted revolutionist, was shot yesterday at the fortress of Mont Julch, where he had been confined since his condemnation by court-martial.

He faced the firing squad without flinching, and fell dead at the first volley. Ferrer, except for a momentary expression of emotion immediately preceding his death, retained his composure to the last.

His attorney, K. M. Macleran, who had defended the prisoner, had secured permission for a brief talk with the revolutionist before the latter was led to the ditch where he was to die. To his attorney Ferrer spoke feelingly of the work for which he had sacrificed his life, and of the future of his daughter, whose brave attempt to save his life touched the father more deeply than any other incident of his trial and conviction. On Ferrer's arrest his family was left dependent upon his daughter, who at once secured employment in a biscuit factory.

The daughter made a personal appeal to King Alfonso to spare her father's life. When these facts were related by Malceran, Ferrer broke down. It was but a passing emotion, and presently the undaunted revolutionist was himself again.

Ferrer declined to receive the last sacraments and turned away from the two priests of the Order of the Peace and Charity, who had been sent by the prison authorities to offer him the final consolation of the church.

When the hour of his execution arrived he walked bravely through the prison yard to the ditch in the shadow of the encircling wall. Without a quiver he faced the 12 infantrymen who, at the word of command, fired a single shot. When the report of the volley had died away Ferrer was dead upon the ground.

Previous to the execution precautions had been taken to forestall a possible attempt at rescue by doubling the sentinels upon the walls of the fortress.

"Political Cannibalism."

Paris, Oct. 14.—The news of the execution of Ferrer at Barcelona created a tremendous sensation when printed here yesterday. The newspapers issued extra editions with glaring head-lines, some of them expressing the belief that King Alfonso had compromised his future by failing to intervene.

Interviews printed show that many persons prominent in the scientific and political world, are both indignant and pained at the day's events in Spain. A member of the institute said that he was stupefied at the execution, which he characterized as an act of political cannibalism.

Alfonso's Death Warrant.

Brussels, Oct. 14.—Peuple, a Socialist organ, announced the death of Ferrer in a special edition yesterday. Editorially the paper stated: "The awful news will unchain a tempest. We fear that in refusing to stop the execution Alfonso has signed his own death warrant."

Feared Pope's Interference.

Rome, Oct. 14.—It is believed here that the execution of Ferrer at Barcelona was hastened by the fear that the Pope would intervene. According to this theory, the Spanish authorities wished to prevent their Sovereign being placed in a position where he might have to grant or refuse a papal request for pardon.

The Tolstoi of Spain.

London, Oct. 14.—The News said editorially yesterday: "If Prof. Ferrer, one of the noblest and most unselfish men in all Europe, and worthy to be called the Tolstoi of Spain, is murdered after a mock trial, the civilized world will suffer an unspeakable humiliation."

GOT ONE CENT PER YEAR AND HAS NOW LOST THE JOB

Galena, Ill., Oct. 14.—Since 1881, a period of twenty-eight years, a man who has been carrying the mails over an eight-mile route at an annual salary of one cent has lost his job. It was not from any neglect of duty that this employe of the Government's was ruthlessly severed from the pay roll. Neither is there any evidence that he was unwilling to continue longer the duties of his position, for he worked as long as his penny a year was forthcoming.

The Postoffice Department has decided to discontinue star route No. 391,135, between Dodgeville and Mineral Point. This line of eight miles was a remnant of the old route established between Milwaukee and Galena in 1835. It was reduced to eight miles in 1881.

The carrier has been offered as high as $20 for his Government order paying him his yearly stipend, but has thus far resisted the souvenir hunters.

ATROCITIES IN THE CONGO

Brussels, Oct. 14.—The atrocities perpetrated by King Leopold of Belgium, through his representatives, in the Congo Free State are to be exposed at last in a court of law.

Lieut. Emil Dorphelhaus, a naval officer, in utter disgust, has given up his contract as an official in the Congo to come home and reveal to his countrymen the horrors that he has witnessed with his own eyes. Dorphelhaus has been for two years in the employ of the Society Anonyme Belge in the Congo. He managed to endure the sight of a native man flayed alive because he had failed to bring in the assigned tribute of rubber to the Belgian officials. But when the lieutenant beheld a woman bound hand and foot upon a hill of red ants and devoured by the insects, he gave up his commission.

The company, alleging breach of contract, refused to pay his back salary or to reimburse him his expenses. The lieutenant is now suing the company, and there is to be a court hearing at which the atrocities of the Congo will be laid bare.

SAYS ESKIMOS DECEIVED PEARY

Buffalo, Oct. 14.—Dr. Fred. Cook said yesterday: "The Eskimos were instructed not to tell Mr. Peary or his men of our trip over the Polar Seas. They have kept their word. Mr. Whitney has said that of this talk that the Eskimos did not understand the questions or the man. Their replies have been twisted to suit a perverted interest.

Mukden, Oct. 14.—The despotic Government of China will terminate to-day. All the Legislatures of the self-governing provinces throughout the empire will hold their first meetings preparatory to the drafting of a constitution for the empire.

BARRIE GETS A DIVORCE

London, Oct. 14.—James M. Barrie, the novelist and playwright, was yesterday granted a divorce from his wife on the grounds of the latter's misconduct with Gilbert Cannan, a young author. The suit was not defended.

Barrie himself took the witness stand, and said that in 1908 he permitted the co-respondent the use of a cottage which the novelist owned at Fairham. Matters first came to his ears from the servants, and his wife admitted their truth. Barrie said that he offered to forgive the offences on the condition that the defendant should break off her acquaintance with Cannan. He also said that he would consent to an agreement of separation. Both these offers were refused by Mrs. Barrie, who pleaded with her husband to set her free, declaring that Cannan was the only man in the world for her.

Duluth, Minn., Oct. 14.—The first official announcement of the time of beginning construction of the plant of the U. S. Steel Corporation, at the head of Lake Superior, came yesterday in a letter authorized by Judge E. H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors. Actual construction work on the plant, the first unit of which will cost not less than $10,000,000, will begin late this fall.

THE MESSENGER'S REPLY

It is difficult to discuss any question appertaining to faith and morals, which include practically everything, with a priest of the Catholic Church since he starts with "infallibility" as the foundation of his statements. It is impossible for a mere ordinary fallible human being to argue with infallibility. The consequence is that we must therefore either bow down and accept the priest's ruling without one word of argument or remonstrance, or else boldly debate the question as if it were not already settled. This implies no disrespect to the church, the priest or to the faithful. We have not and we never had any desire to say one unseemly word, or one intolerant word of any church, or person, or any faith. Nor do we consider it "degrading" to profess any faith, and we especially renounce all desire to claim infallibility on any point, and therefore we welcome all forms of discussion. It will, therefore, we hope, be taken for granted that we do not condemn or despise any man's faith or ideas because they are his and not ours. But we do not care to have any man say that what we think is necessarily wrong, and that it must not be tolerated, and that we are cumberers of the ground, &c. Our reason forbids us to say it of him and we wish him to preserve a like moderation and tolerance.

The point we discussed in our offending article, so far as our miserable conceit would allow us reasonably so to do, was and is that an infallible church being possessed of the Truth does not allow anybody to decide otherwise than it does. This was the pith of our little article. We went on to say that the modern "struggle for existence" is the struggle between the Catholic Church as its recent encyclical against modernism shows, and those who propose to think and decide for themselves. Let us ask the reverend editor a question. Does he say that the Roman Catholic Church allows its members to decide for themselves on points of faith and morals? If it does then our article was absurd. If it does not then we contend that we are discussing a live and pertinent question. Since the struggle involves a recurring crisis in human manner of thought, surely it may be termed a "great" struggle. If it is a question of where the seat of reason in matters of faith and of right and wrong lies, surely it is time for a settlement. If we are wrong, let us proceed to find it out.

As to liberty to do wrong, no one contends, but first find which is wrong. That's the point, not the other. We wish to make our reply respectful, polite and considerate, but we have been brought up to think and decide for ourselves and find it hard to give it up or to ask anybody else to give up that privilege, Catholic or Protestant, or neither. This question of deciding is, to our wretched little mind, the most vital of all to human liberty, and therefore it is not wonderful that the whole world is throbbing with it today. Has a man a right to think for himself? Or should he surrender to the Catholic Church and to the priests of the church his freedom of thought and action? Surely this question is worthy of being asked and worthy of being answered, without heat. Is there no freedom of the will? If there is the will must be free. And if the will becomes insolent and intent upon deliberate wrong, God will punish it. We do not suppose that it is necessary for man to interfere. But is the normal state of the will a "free" state? That we venture to think is the question

But let us go farther. The principle we are contending for is neither Catholic nor Protestant, but simply the principle of human freedom. If there is no such thing as human freedom, then, of course, we are altogether wrong and the reverend editor is right.

A PRIEST'S REPLY

The following reply to an article upon "The Greatest of all Struggles," in a recent number of the Review, appears in the October number of the Home Messenger, a Catholic monthly, of which Rev. W. J. McColl, of St. Peter's Cathedral, is editor. The Messenger's editor replies to the Review as follows:

This scare heading appeared in the Peterborough Daily Review of September 22nd ult. The article is written as an editorial, and proposes to describe a struggle between the Catholic Church and modernism. The writer intimates (falsely of course) that the Plenary Council now held at Quebec was convened to fight that error. He endeavours to prove that a Catholic is hampered in his search after truth by what he considers a blind, degrading obedience to the canons of an infallible church. He then champions the cause of modernism which he confounds with freedom of thought, when he states that "the modernist, however, believes that he has a right to think for himself, and to reject upon his own responsibility what he thinks fit to reject." This is a catchy saying, and is an appeal to pride, conceit and vanity, which the learned scribe seems to possess in no small degree. But the question naturally arises. "Has the modernist or anyone else the right to think error or falsehood, or the right to reject truth should he think fit to do so?" Further on he adds: "Against the church are arrayed all who propose to think and decide for themselves." Here I might remark that against the church are arrayed all who are ignorant of her teaching, and those who have decided to misrepresent and calumniate her. In another place he states, "that this great world-conflict embraces in its outcome the liberty of the human race to do as it sees fit." This statement implies the horrible doctrine, that the human race has the right to murder, steal or commit any other crime should it see fit to do so.

It is quite evident the author of this editorial believes himself to be a bit of a philosopher, so we are giving him below a few points to philosophise on.

We are rational beings endowed intelligence and will power. This every man must admit under pain of being classed as a fool or an idiot. The proper object of our intelligence is truth, and of our will the good. By willing what is good we develope and strengthen our will power; by willing what is evil we injure and weaken it. This is evident from our experience with the drunkard, the blasphemer, the liar, the impure, etc. Every time we use our intelligence to reason and think correctly we develope and expand our intelligence and reasoning faculties. Every time we reason or think erroneously we injure our reasoning faculties and narrow our intelligence. People have a right then to think truth, but no right whatever to think falsehood or to believe a lie. No one has any more right to believe what is false than he has a right to do what is evil. Christ plainly tells us that error and sin imply not the liberty, but the slavery of the intellect and will. "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." (John, 8, 32.) "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin." (Ibid. 34.) Universal liberty to think what one pleases is impossible, for every principle and fact of reason that we acquire, must necessarily restrict our liberty of thinking the opposite. Once we clearly grasp any truth we are bound by the law of reason to accept it. No intelligent man would consider himself free to deny that two and two are four, or the existence of wireless telegraphy, the existence of bacteria or X rays. No man of sense even if he had never travelled beyond his own little village, would question the testimony of others regarding the existence of London, Pekin or Calcutta. A man full of prejudiced ignorance and error may think he has the right to believe calumnies against religion and the Catholic church. But surely he is not to be congratulated for claiming the freedom or the right to believe what is not true.

The right to think and decide for yourself implies the right to realise that thought in action and habit. If it means less than this, it means simply the right to gabble like an idiot. I assume it is not this latter is claimed. Then, in claiming the right to think and decide for yourself, you claim the right to realize that thought in act and in practice in the affairs of life. Now in view of this claim of yours I ask, by what right do you interfere with the murderer, the thief, the perjurer or any other criminal, because these men have thought and decided for themselves.

To claim then the people have the right to think what they please and decide to do what they see fit, is to claim the right or liberty to do wrong, a claim made by no civilized people on the face of the earth. There are individuals, of course, who claim the liberty to do wrong, but they are comparatively few. Some of them have died suddenly and prematurely by dislocation of the neck, and some others are in the penitentiary. Poor encouragement for disciples of liberty of license and heroes of free thought, who claim the right to think and act as they see fit.

SOME MORE REASONING.

We hold it is reasonable to believe in the existence of a personal and intelligent God. We hold that we have reasonable evidence that this God has spoken to mankind. And God being infinite and eternal Truth, we hold that it is supremely reasonable to believe whatever He has said to us. God speaking to us is revelation; our believing what He says is faith. Thus faith and revelation have their ground work in reason. Thus reason serves as the natural basis of revelation.

It is reasonable to believe in the existence of God, for "the heavens show forth the glory of God, and the firmament declareth the work of His hands." (Ps. 18, 1.) There is in the natural world a manifestation of God which lays all men under the obligation of knowing Him. Those, who with the sights of nature before them, remain in ignorance of God, are not only intellectually in error, but they are also morally in error, and they are responsible for that moral error. Not to know God is culpable ignorance, a sin. St. Paul says to the Romans, "The invisible things of Him" (that is God) "from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made; His eternal power also, divinity; so that they are inexcusable. Because that, when they knew God, they have not glorified Him as God, nor gave thanks; but became vain in their thoughts, and their foolish heart was darkened. For professing themselves to be wise they became fools. And they changed the glory of the incorruptible God into the likeness of corruptible men." (Rom. 1- 20-23.) They then who with the sights of reason, amidst the sights of nature do not know God, are guilty for that ignorance, are culpable before God, and for that culpable ignorance will have to give an account on the last day.

Jesus Christ proclaimed Himself to be God, and proved His claim by the beauty and virtuousness of His life, by His work, by His miracles, and the wonderful influence His teachings have had in the regeneration of man, and the uplifting of society. He performed deeds above and beyond nature itself, works which only God can do. He had but to speak the word, and the dumb spoke, the deaf heard, the blind saw, lepers were cleansed, the dead. The knowledge of such deeds forces us to exclaim with Nicodemus: "Master, we know that you come from God because no one could do the works that you do, if God were not with him." (John 3:2.)

To these we must add the fulfillment in his own person of prophecies which were made centuries before, foretelling the special circumstances of His birth, life, passion, death and resurrection. Centuries before the event, Daniel foretold the time of His coming; Micheas that He would be born at Bethlehem; Isaias that a virgin would be His mother; and so on with regard to a host of other circumstances.

o—o—o

REASONS FOR BELIEVING THE CHURCH.

We believe what Jesus Christ teaches because He is God, who neither can deceive nor be deceived. We believe what the Catholic church teaches because it was established by Jesus Christ to teach what He taught to all nations for all time. We believe what the church teaches, because it is the pillar and ground of truth, against which the gates of hell shall never prevail; because Jesus Christ has promised to be with the church all days, even to the consummation of the world; because the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Truth abides with the church forever, in order to teach her all truth, and to bring to her mind all the truth which Christ has taught. Therefore those who hear the church hear the exact teaching of Christ. "He that heareth you heareth me." (Luke 10:16.) Infallibility, therefore, is a corrective of ignorance and error, and the foe to uncertainty about the truths revealed by God. There can, therefore, be no question of any intellectual or moral slavery for a man to submit to an authority established by God Himself. On the contrary, I affirm that faith is the most perfect act of the human reason, that the most reasonable act of man is to believe in the infallible word of God, who is infinite and uncreated Truth. Truth gives freedom to the intellect, error slavery. "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8:32.)

MEN AND CHURCH ATTENDANCE

This question does not apply to the Catholic church, as our men do attend church. We hear a great deal at the present time about the need of a scientific religion. The doctrines of the Catholic Church are reasonable, clear and logical; in fact Catholic theology is the chief of sciences on account of the pre-eminent certainty of its principles. As His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons observes: "We (churchmen) have no reason to complain of our Catholic people. In the cities the churches are crowded at each of the five or six masses offered on Sunday; in the rural districts, in good weather and in bad, Catholics seldom find any difficulty so great, any condition so intolerable as to have to dispense with their obligatory attendance at the Divine Services on Sunday."

Freedom of thought and "free thought" are two different things. The latter is usually considered atheism, which very few people profess nowadays.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Unchanged—Hogs Heavy and Lower at Buffalo.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Oct. 13.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market this morning the offerings were 1400 cattle, 400 sheep, 500 lambs, 1200 hogs and 275 calves. This was without doubt the largest market held at the Canadian Pacific Market this season, and the offerings of cattle consisted largely of northwest ranch stock in good condition, but owing to the excessive supply after the large run of Monday, butchers were slow in operating, and, as dealers showed no disposition to reduce prices, trade was rather slow, and the indications at noon were that some would be left over for a future market. There was some enquiry from exporters, but, as dealers demanded higher prices than they could afford to pay, with the foreign markets in their present condition, nothing was done in this direction. The feeling was easy, but no actual decline in values was recorded. Choice steers sold at 4⅝c to 5c; good at 4¼c to 4½c; fair at 3⅝c to 4c; medium at 3¼c to 3½c; good cows at 3⅝c to 4¼c; common at 3c to 3¼c, and bulls at 2¾c to 4c per pound.

In small meats an active trade was done, and, as supplies were not very large, prices were well maintained at the advance noted earlier in the week. Lambs brought 5¼c, and sheep 3½c per pound. The demand for calves was good at prices ranging from $3 to $12 each, as to size and quality. The undertone to the market for hogs was easy, but prices showed no further change, sales of selected lots being made at $8.50 to $8.75 per cwt., weighed off cars.

Oriental Labor Would Help.

London, Oct. 14.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson said, in regard to the position at the Prince Rupert end of the line, that everything practically hinged upon the supply of labor. The early completion of the road means much to the province, and the temporary employment of three or four thousand Asiatics would save two or three years. Their introduction would not displace a single native Canadian. When their contracts ended they would be taken back to the orient.

New Steamer Arrives.

Owen Sound, Oct. 14.—The Dominion Government's new steamer Simcoe, was in port yesterday, having arrived from Vail's Point, 15 miles from here, where they have placed a new automatic gas buoy with bell and light. The erection of the buoy will be good news to Georgian Bay captains, especially those sailing between Owen Sound and Collingwood, as the shoal at the point was considered a very dangerous spot.

Niagara Orchards Suffer.

Niagara Falls, Oct. 14.—Tuesday's heavy snowstorm, which continued all night, caused serious damage to fruit trees in the district, many being broken down by the heavyweight of the snow. Grape and late peach crops have also been damaged by cold.

The Soo line is building a cut-off near Thief River to meet C.N.R. competition.

PRESIDENT OF SOCIETY PRESENTED WITH WATCH

To be president of an agricultural society for forty years is something that any man might be proud of. In addition to being at the head of the East Peterborough Agricultural Society for two score years Mr. Frank Birdsall has been married fifty years. The fiftieth anniversary of his marriage fell on Wednesday of this week—the main day of the Norwood Fair—and the directors and other officers of the society did honor to him on the occasion. Mr. Birdsall was present at the fair, and in the afternoon he was called to the bandstand and presented with a handsome gold watch. The timepiece was a 17-jewelled, solid gold Waltham one, and on it was engraved the following:—"East Peterborough Agricultural Society. Presented to Frank Birdsall, Esq., for forty years president, and on the fiftieth anniversary of his marriage to Emma Birdsall."

The presentation was made by Mr. J. B. Pearce, who made a short speech of a suitable nature. The secretary of the society, Mr. Roxburgh, and several of the directors also made short speeches, congratulating Mr. Birdsall, who thanked the officers of the society very heartily for the gift and the kind sentiments expressed.

Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P. for East Peterborough, also spoke and referred to the excellent work done by Mr. Birdsall during his long term as president of the society.

COLD DIDN'T INTERFERE WITH THE SUCCESS OF NORWOOD'S BIG FAIR

Norwood Fair has again passed into history, and in spite of the extremely disagreeable weather conditions, was almost as big a success as ever before. Norwood is famous for its annual exhibition and as a meeting place for thousands of people from far and near it is a record-breaker.

This year a new and up-to-date pair of iron turnstiles admitted the paid ticket holders and the registers at the close of the afternoon showed that nearly 3,700 people had passed through them. Besides this number there were hundreds who went in the big gate with rigs and another smaller gate for exhibitors. This would probably mean that 4,500 or more people attended the fair. The noon train from Peterborough carried several hundred, most of whom waited for the special train to return at night.

A pleasing feature was a presentation of a handsome solid gold watch and fob to Mr. F. Birdsall, who for forty years has been president of the East Peterborough Agricultural Society. The presentation was made by Mr. J. B. Pearce, a long-time associate of Mr. Birdsall as a director, who gave a short address.

Lieut.-Col. Hemming, of Kingston, inspected the cadets of the local school, who gave a very creditable exhibition of drill in four companies. The colonel expressed himself as highly pleased with the efficiency of the boys.

The exhibits in all classes were, as usual, very large. This was most especially noticeable in the cattle section where a great entry had been made. Ayrshires, Shorthorns, Holsteins, Polled Angus, Jerseys and Herefords were all big classes, and of fine quality. An unusual feature was the large number of Herefords, which made a hot class, some dozen exhibitors showing a lot of fine animals.

Horses were a big attraction, but the judging, on account of the cold, was hurried, and spectators kept on the move to a very noticeable degree.

Sheep and hogs were somewhat smaller classes than former years, and poultry was also a slightly smaller entry. This could be accounted for by the cold and the fact that there was no shelter provided for the feathered pets.

The inside exhibit was particularly fine in places, the roots being much beyond the average seen at the fairs this year. The potatoes shown were fit to win in any competition anywhere.

The main building was a favorite spot for two reasons, the attraction of the exhibit and the shelter from the wintry breeze, that kept the crowd on the move.

SPECIAL EXHIBITS

GRAFTON & CO.

Norwood always has an extensive Midway at its fair, and this year was no exception. First tent on the row in the most prominent place on the grounds was that containing the big clothing exhibit of Grafton & Co., the popular clothiers of Peterborough.

All the newest things in men's fall and winter wear were shown, and were much admired by an interested crowd, which surrounded the tent all afternoon. The get-up and style that is exclusively Grafton's, is apparent in every garment. Everything is made at the firm's own factory at Dundas, and therefore comes direct from factory to the people.

The Grafton signs were placed conspicuously in all parts of the grounds, telling the various points of merit of of the clothing and men's furnishings handled at the Peterborough store.

Better than Medicine is a good Hot Water Bottle. Try the "WALPOLE." It's patented, all one piece of Rubber, moulded. All druggists.

CONCERT AT MARK STREET

Was Heard by a Large Number Who Enjoyed the Splendid Programme

The concert given by the Mark street church choir last evening proved to be highly enjoyable to the large number who were present. The talent taking part in the programme acted very generously in acceding to the wishes of their audience for encores at the conclusion of their first number. Particularly pleasing was the work of Miss Josie Callender, with two solos. This young vocalist always pleases, and her numbers last evening were a repetition of former successes. The male quartette sang with good effect, their voices blending harmoniously in in the selections they gave. Mr. C. Coleman and Mr. T. Pratt were heard to advantage in several solos, as was also Mr. L. Moore in his readings. Mr. H. Foster acted as accompanist on the piano in a creditable manner, and also gave a much appreciated selection. Rev C. H. Coon acted as chairman, and while the audience was arriving and during a short intermission gave a number of choice and well selected phonograph numbers.

Through the efforts of Mr. T. Pratt the excellent programme was secured and arranged for, and he is to be congratulated on the success of the concert. The programme follows;—

A HORSE IN A LAUNDRY

New York.—A horse, attached to a laundry wagon, became frightened and made a wild dash up Broadway. Spying a sign with a shirt on it, the horse plunged into the laundry, and, ridding itself of the wagon, landed with all four feet upon the lingerie and shirts that a dozen laundresses were sorting.

When the horse went through the door, the laundresses went out the windows amid a shower of hot irons, starch and bluing bottles. When the excitement was over, the horse was found calmly munching a bundle of laundry tickets.

It is "a horse of another color" when there is pain in the back, when the legs ache, when the stomach is upset and there is indication of kidney trouble.

"Fruit-a-tives", the famous fruit juice medicine, is giving wonderful results in all cases of weak and strained kidneys. "Fruit-a-tives" acts directly on the kidneys, relieving the inflammation, and at the same time, regulating bowels, stomach and skin.

As Good as He Sent.

At a recent meeting of the directors of an eastern railroad a prominent railroad man repeated a story that he just had from a conductor on one of the limited expresses between New York and the west.

It seems that a dapper chap in the first chair car had managed to become unusually friendly with an attractive young woman in an adjoining seat. When the train pulled into Buffalo the masher, in taking leave of the lass, remarked:

"Do you know, I must thank you for an awfully, awfully pleasant time, but I'm afraid you would not have been so nice to me had you known that I was a married man."

"Oh, as to that," quickly and pleasantly responded the charming young woman, "you haven't the least advantage of me. I am an escaped lunatic."

BREAKFAST FRUIT.

The Best Said to Be Oranges, Grapes and Fresh Olives.

Of all breakfast fruits the orange is deservedly the most popular. It is a food that is distinctly health giving. Orange juice aids greatly in reducing the amount of putrefaction found in the intestines of nearly all persons who are submitted to clinical laboratory tests.

Grapes are another fruit that should always be eaten freely when obtainable. Apples are preferably eaten before retiring, and two are about twice as good as one. The apple habit, persisted in, often works rather surprising results with persons who are naturally listless. Lemons can hardly be eaten as a fruit, but lemonade is a valuable beverage. When used as a laxative fresh figs should form the dessert. When not obtainable the dried figs form a good substitute.

Of the value of bananas there seems some reasonable doubt. Many persons complain that they find them indigestible. They are quite likely to reach this conclusion if the banana be eaten frequently as the needless complement of an already hearty meal. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that the growing popularity of the fresh olive is fully deserved. It surely ranks with the orange and the grape and is, of course, much ahead of either in cases of sluggish intestines or constitutional thinness.—H. Irving Hancock in Good Housekeeping.

TOO COMPLICATED.

The Reason We Say "You" Instead of Using "Thou."

The reason commonly given for the substitution of the second person plural for the second person singular, "you" instead of "thou"—that it originated as a fad of courtesy—may explain its origin, but its universal adoption is due to a deeper reason—namely, that the second person singular of the verb is a complicated and difficult form, while the second person plural is simple to the last degree.

With every principal verb in the language and with every auxiliary except "must" the pronoun "thou" requires a special change in the form of the verb, which is often the only break in an otherwise uniform series. Thus in the present tense of every verb, with the single exception of the verb "be," the pronoun "you" employs the unchanged root form of the verb, as "you love, have, can do, shall, will," etc., while "thou" requires a change of form, as "thou lovest, hast, canst, dost, shalt, wilt," etc.

In every such choice the unchanged root form has always the right of way. Thus "you" has become everywhere current in the busy activities of life, while "thou" is carefully laid up in the museum of antiquity or the shrine of religion.—James C. Fernald in Harper's Magazine.

A Frank Woman.

A woman gave another woman her photograph, and the recipient, instead of saying, "I will treasure it always," refused to accept it. "It means only one more thing to be dusted," she said. "If I have it out on the table it becomes a nuisance, and if I put it out of sight you will be offended. Moreover, every day that passes it will become a little more old fashioned and a little more of a caricature. I won't have it."—Atchison Globe.

Much Rather.

Great Discovery after 2000 years

Two thousand years ago the usual method of healing skin injuries and diseases was to apply certain essences and juices obtained direct from various healing herbs and roots. The gladiators of ancient Rome and the athletes of Greece adopted this means of healing their injuries, and with wonderful effect. A gladiator would emerge from the ring having sustained terrible cuts and bruises, yet on the application of his favourite herbal balm, within a few days he would again be ready for combat.

As centuries rolled by, the secret of making these herbal extracts was lost, and ointments and salves made up of animal fats took the place of the pure herbal balm.

Zam-Buk, the great balm which during the past few years has revolutionised the system of skin-healing, was produced by returning to the idea of the ancients, that man's best medicaments must be found in herbal extracts.

In the investigation which followed, the necessity was seen for entirely excluding the rancid fats and coarse minerals from which most modern ointments are compounded, and sticking closely to nature.

Scientific inquiry eventually centred round the peculiar properties of certain vegetable saps and juices. These extracts from rare herbs had, it was found, a curious power that enabled them when spread on the broken skin, to knit the edges of tissues together—in short, the power of healing injuries in a marvellously natural way, and of annihilating any germs of disease harboured by wound or pore.

The choice of the right herbal juices and their refinement comprised the next step, after which came the more difficult problem of finding out just the exact proportion of the different ingredients which would give the best healing results. Early disappointment and costly experiments are often the forerunner of famous discoveries, but at length, when success arrived, the investigators found themselves in the possession of a substance of fine consistency, of slight yet agreeable odour, and unique for its marvellous healing, soothing and antiseptic value. The original medicinal power of the respective ingredients was found to have been multiplied many times by reason of the scientific and novel manner of their combination as they exert in Zam-Buk.

Careful tests established the exceptional value of the new balm, its constant reliability, and its unvarying success even in certain obstinate cases of eczema and ulceration.

From the first Zam-Buk has born out in practice what its discoverers expected of it from a practical standpoint. In four continents it has now become the favourite household balm. Cheap substitutes made up to look like Zam-Buk, and sold at so-called "cheap" rates, are constantly being produced, but the careful housewife, the mother, bearing the responsibility and the welfare of her ailing children, or the bread-winner, who once wastes money on them never repeats the experiment. There is no "cheapness" in nature. If one wants her treasure her price must be paid, and now people don't waste money on "cheap" imitations.

Zam-Buk, so pure yet so powerful, is good for young and old. The delicate skin of babes benefit from its application and it is widely used by nursing mothers for the rashes and chafings of very young children. Men of experience and of great attainments in varied walks of life have tested it, and speak of it in the highest terms.

Dr. Andrew Wilson, whose name as a scientist is familiar all the world over, in one of his recent medical works ("Homely Talks on First Aid") says: "Wherever a box of Zam-Buk is handy the preparation may be relied upon as an antiseptic dressing which requires no preparation and has the particular advantage of possessing unique healing properties."

Mr. Frank Scudamore, the great war correspondent says: "Zam-Buk cured me of blood-poisoning, which caused severe ulcers. It is a splendid healer, and I hope its merits will become even more widely known."

Mr. R. F. Perry, Justice of the Peace, of Goldfields, B.C., says: "Zam-Buk cured me of a skin rash of five years' duration, which no doctor had been able to relieve."

For skin eruptions, scalp sores, ulcers, abscesses, poisoning, cold sores, chapped places, frost bite, blistering, chafing, ringworm, etc., Zam-Buk is without equal. For piles it is the best remedy yet discovered. It relieves the burning, stabbing, throbbing pains, and gives ease. Almost all druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at fifty cents per box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

SIMULTANEOUS EVANGELISM; A GREAT GENERAL MOVEMENT

The Presbyterian Church in Canada two years ago appointed a committee on "Evangelism" with Dr. Gordan (Ralph Connor) of Winnipeg, convener. The committee is composed of leading ministers from all over the Dominion. The simultaneous idea is something new in evangelism. It may be said to have originated with Dr. Chapman, of the American Presbyterian Church. By a simultaneous mission is meant the holding of special services for the quickening of spiritual life, and the winning of men, women and children to Christ and His service, in a number of centres in a large city, or places in a district, at the same time. Last year the committee inaugurated two such campaigns, one in the Presbytery of Minnedosa, and another in the Kootney. The results were so satisfactory that there are over ten Presbyteries hosting such campaigns this fall and winter. The Presbytery of Peterborough is one of these. It holds its mission in the month of November. A committee of Presbytery with Rev. R. Pogue as convener, is making all necessary arrangements. Already the committee has secured the promises of some twenty prominent ministers of the Presbyterian church to come and help in the work in this place. During the first two weeks in November, about twelve congregations will be holding special meetings at the same and during the last two weeks about as many more.

There will be three such meetings in Peterborough, in St. Paul's, St. Andrew's and Knox church. Rev. R. G. MacBeth, of Paris, will be the missioner in St. Paul's. Rev. Robt. Atkinson, of Chesley, in St. Andrew's, and Rev. A. E. Mitchell, of Hamilton, in Knox. The other denominations in the town are being asked to join in the movement. Should the meetings be union, the congregations immediately in the vicinity of each of the above centres will attend the church nearest to them, as for example, the George St. Methodist, St. John's and Murray St. Baptist would be expected to join St. Paul's.

This effort promises to be one of great magnitude, and may be expected to result in much good to our city. Revivals make for civic betterment. This is evident from the fact that in many places where corrupt civic conditions existed after a revival, citizens have risen in their might and demanded integrity in official places, and the removal of offenders. This is due to an awakened conscience. Revivals also result in a social elevation in a community. They raise the whole tone of social life. Higher ideals are obtained and all the relationships of life bettered.

Bernarda Daly the Sweetest Irish Singer Coming

Mr. Bernard Daly, the bright particular star in the new Irish play, 'Sweet Innisfallen,' is a born "Harp"—while in a technical sense he is a born American. Yet his ancestry and youthful surroundings were as Irish as Paddy's pig. If Mr. Daly could by any possibility reproduce upon the stage the excruciatingly funny characters, their quaint, original sayings and acts, he so graphically mimics when off the stage and free from dramatic cares, nothing more humorous could be presented. Mr. Daly does not do this in the spirit of ridicule—not at all; they are merry, original personalities, strongly marked characteristics of an original and witty race. As a boy he was ashamed of them, as boys will be when any peculiarity attaches itself to their trade, but as he grew to manhood and realized that it was a mark of distinction to be original (so few of us are; we are like the little squares of cheese one finds on a free lunch counter—all alike.) Not so with Mr. Daly's characters, they are from life, the "real thing," merely transplanted from the mother sod to America, with the same wit and wisdom, fun and fight, as when they tramped the city streets or rural lanes, hills and dales of Old Ireland. The Irish are natural mimics and story tellers, and Mr. Daly is most gifted in this national trait. Nature gave him a soft tenor voice which he, as soon as he was old enough to appreciate its value, placed under the training of some of the best and most noted voice teachers in Boston. For several years he studied, and to-day he has a voice of exquisite sweetness, which he uses in his vocal selections in "Sweet Innisfallen." He has five new songs—ballads of Old Ireland—and that old familiar melody that will never die, "The Wearing of the Green." Mr. Daly and his new play will be at the Grand Opera House on Wednesday, October 20th, for one night only, under auspices Division 1, A.O.H.

DEATH OF AN OLD CITIZEN

Mr Christopher Leary Passed Away This Morning

One of the best-known citizens of Peterborough, Mr. Christopher Leary, passed away this morning at the residence of his son, Mr. R. H. Leary, 182 McDonnel street. Deceased was in his 89th year, and had a wide circle of acquaintances in this city and vicinity. He was born in Kingston, Ont., on February 14th, 1821, and when seven years of age, moved in an ox-cart with his parents to Haldimand township in the county of Northumberland. On March the 8th, 1849, he married Miss Ann Wear, of Otonabee township, who predeceased her husband in 1896—thirteen years ago.

Two years after his marriage Mr. Leary moved to Douro, where he purchased a farm and followed farming in that township. From Douro he went to North Monaghan and moved to Minden about three years before his wife's death. Since the death of Mrs. Leary he has resided with Mr. R. H. Leary, in this city.

The late Mr. Leary was a member of the North Monaghan Council for a number of years. He dealt extensively in real estate, and was interested in several important exchanges. Mr. Leary will be remembered as being a great horse fancier, and was an authority in this line.

In religion the deceased was an Anglican, and a member of St. Luke's church. He was a Liberal in politics and an active worker in all the elections.

Surviving are five children of a family of eight. They are, John E., Cheyenne, Okla; Daniel A., and Wm. F. Corpus Christie, Texas; Charles C., Los Angeles, Cal., and R. H., of Peterborough. Two brothers also are living, Thomas, of Moore's Falls, Ont., and William, of the township of Haldimand.

The funeral will be held from the late residence at 3 p.m. on Saturday, to Little Lake cemetery.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

PETERBORO' GIRL MAKES BIG IMPRESSION IN VAUDEVILLE

The New York Evening World says: A new female whistler makes her debut at Keith & Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre this afternoon. She is Olive Helene Greatrex, a charming young Canadian woman, formerly of Peterborough, who is said to have most remarkable powers in her specialty. She strikes the high note of high C with the accuracy and strength of an operatic tenor.

Miss Greatrex was born in Toronto. She has whistled almost since babyhood. The accomplishment is natural but her parents and friends tried to break her of the habit.

Two years ago the young woman went to Colorado to spend the summer on a ranch. Some of the cowboys heard her whistle and reports of her ability spread until she became a character in the ranch life of the section. Her parents moved to Chicago, where she attended the Academy of Fine Arts and, upon the advice of experts, her gift was cultivated.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

SPORTING NEWS

THE TEAM IS ROUNDING INTO EXCELLENT FORM

To down the Parkdale Canoe Club at Riverdale Park on Saturday afternoon is the big task before the Peterborough rugby club. The boys realize that they are going to have the hardest kind of a job to win from the paddlers and they are going their best to get into shape to win the game. Under Dr. McPherson's coaching the team has developed wonderfully and will put up an article of football that will surprise its supporters. The presence of Allan Campbell, who has turned out with the locals, will add considerable strength to the team. He will play quarter and Lundy will be moved out on the wing line, where he will be a valuable man on account of his fine tackling.

The back division has not yet been selected. There is plenty of good material to pick from, however, and the team will be represented by a strong and well balanced line. The game will start at 2.30.

SPORTING NOTES

The Lindsay Warder takes a knock at a poetical reference to wrestling which appeared in the Review. Unsay them cruel words.

With Tom Longboat and Alf. Shrubb back in Toronto again, look out for squalls.

The Lindsay sports have evidently forgotten the baseball game and are interesting themselves in Rugby.

The P.C.I. team have decided not to go to Lindsay this Saturday.

Mrs. Ty Cobb has been engaged by the Detroit Journal to write the story of her emotions during the ball games of the world's series. At Pittsburg Mrs. Cobb wrote that she journeyed the gamut from deeper despair to greater joy, all in 24 hours.

RUGBY

THE JUNIOR SERIES.

The schedule for the middle district of the junior O.R.F.U. which includes Lindsay and Peterborough has been drawn up. Lindsay will play at Peterborough on October 25th. Thanksgiving day, the return game being played here on Saturday, Oct. 30th, points to count to declare winner.

The locals had a good work out last night, Murdie making his first appearance of the season. McGregor C. and J. Coulter and Beecroft were also out. Carew looks like a fixture at inside wing, while "Cap." Simpson who has been playing scrimmage on second team, looks good for a trial on the first. The boys are rapidly picking up the fine points of the game, and there promises to be a battle royal when the two district teams clash.—Lindsay Post.

LINDSAY HAS HOPES.

Judging by the form shown by the junior O.R.F.U. teams in their games in Toronto on Saturday, Lindsay should hold their own and also the championship mug again this year. Unless the Parkdale juniors display something marvellous or a wonderful team crops up somewhere in the Province, the locals should experience little difficulty in defending the trophy.—Lindsay Warder.

RACE WILL BE HELD ANYWAY

No word has been received from Prof. T. A. Turner that he will be here for his race billed for to-night with Prof. Genno. As it is not likely that he would put in an appearance without due notice, another man who is equally good, has been secured to meet Prof. Gienno in case Prof. Turner does not come.

Hamilton, Oct. 14.—Catherine Bolton died this morning at the Aged Women's Home at the age of 110 years, she having been perhaps the oldest woman in Canada. Born in England she came to this country when a small girl and remembered Hamilton when it was but a trackless forest. Mrs. Bolton's memory remained comparatively bright up to a couple of years ago.

LARGE CROWDS AT FIRE SALE

Bargains at Richard Hall & Son's Were Eagerly Sought After This Morning

No it wasn't a suffragette meeting on George street this morning, it was the opening of Richard Hall & Son's fire sale and the large crowds in front of the store were composed of housewives who wished to have the opportunity of securing some, if not all, of the bargains offered. Inside the store forty clerks worked overtime in an endeavor to meet the demands of the bargain hunters. The goods as advertised were ticketed at ridiculously low prices and there was a steady stream of happy customers with their arms full of large making an exit by means of the back lane, the front door being only opened at intervals to avoid overcrowding in the store.

GOING TO BUY A TYPEWRITER?

WHY?

WHY equip your office with cumbersome, slow-moving, heavy acting typewriters?

WHY buy typewriters whose sellers are here to-day and gone to-morrow?

WHY waste the time of your office employees by having your billing and tabulating done by the old fashioned way, by hand?

WHY buy a typewriter that does only a part of the work—one that won't do all the special reports and the wide work as well as the correspondence?

WHY be "penny wise and pound foolish" trying to save a small amount on the original cost, at the expense of time and operator's energy when the money-saver shows its weakness?

WHY buy a typewriter without investigating the merits and claims of the one you will sometime wish you had bought—the Light Touch, Long Wearing Monarch?

WHY NOT?

WHY NOT. Since the price of the best and near best is practically the same—why not have the best?

WHY NOT get the typewriter that does all the work—wide and narrow alike—with an ease and speed and exactness approached by none other?

WHY NOT obtain the machine with a wealth of essential and sensible devices to help the operator at every movement and every turn?

WHY NOT buy the typewriter that is sold by its makers direct to the user and bears the guarantee of its makers?

HER MOTHER'S DICTATION

Witness in Borden Libel Case Says Her Mother Dictated Letters—Got $2,000

Special to the Review.

Kentville, N.S., Oct. 11.—In the libel suit brought by Sir Frederick Borden against Carruthers for circulating "Eye Openers," the cross examination of Hester Chalefour to-day brought out a somewhat different story from that of yesterday, when as a defence witness she exonerated Sir Frederick to-day. She admitted authorship of letters which she described yesterday, but said she wrote under her mother's dictation. She denied living with Sir Frederick, but said five years ago he gave her $2,000 and she did not give receipt.

AT THE GRAND

The Honeymooners

Cohan song and Cohan comedy always make a palatable mixture for the connoisseurs of live music comedy. It was a typical Cohan show at the Grand last night, "The Honeymooners," with a dozen mile-a-minute song hits in the big list of excellent musical numbers the features of which were their uniquely tuneful melodies and bright, clever lyrics. The rapid fire dialogue was not put over any too rapidly for the audience and the innumerable lines of crisp comedy were met with cordial applause and spontaneous laughter. The company was a first-class one, all the parts being taken with a vim and ginger that permitted of no lagging in the action of the play. In fact, there was not a lazy moment in the entire offering, which although it is not a "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway" or "A Yankee Prince" is nevertheless an offering of real class and possesses the attractive individuality of all the contributions from the versatile pen of the "Yankee Doodle Comedian."

The plot with its entangled situations and all-round complication of misunderstandings is farcical in every sense, but is original and never grows monotonous. The motive of the theme deals with the contest for mayor of a prohibition and anti-prohibition candidate, and there is an abundance of laugh-provoking material introduced to good advantage in the filling out and embellishment of the story.

Willie Dunlay played the principal comedy part (Augustus Wright) and is a pleasing comedian. He was given every opportunity to shine, being equipped with the best musical numbers of the offering and received several big recalls for "Nothing New Beneath the Sun," and "The Hat My Dear Old Father Wore." Bessie Merrell was bright and captivating as Madeline Tiggr, taking the role with sprightliness and juvenile freshness. She also sang with winning expression and danced cleverly. Nearly all the other members of the cast were uniformally conspicuous for their good work. The chorus is an excellent one.

The Younger Set

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS,

Author of "The Fighting Chance," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1907, BY ROBERT W. CHAMBERS.

After a moment he said, still curious, "Why were you crying, Eileen?"

"Crying! I didn't say I was crying."

"I assume it."

"Well—yes," she admitted. "I was crying—if you insist on knowing. Now that you have driven me to admit that, can you also force me to tell you why I was so tearful?"

"Certainly," he said promptly; "it was something Nina said that made you cry."

They both laughed.

"Oh, what a come-down!" he said teasingly. "You knew that before. How can you force me to confess to you what Nina was saying? If you can, you are the cleverest cross examiner in the world, for I'd rather perish than tell you."

"Oh," he said instantly, "then it was something about love!"

He had not meant to say it. He had spoken too quickly, and the flush of surprise on the girl's face was matched by the color rising to his own temples. And, to retrieve the situation, he spoke too quickly again—and too lightly.

"A girl would rather perish than admit that she is in love?" he said, forcing a laugh. "That is rather a clever deduction, I think. Unfortunately, however, I happen to know to the contrary, so all my cleverness comes to nothing."

The surprise had faded from her face, but the color remained, and with it something else—something in the blue eyes which he had never before encountered there—the faintest trace of recoil, of shrinking away from him.

She was beginning to love him no longer in her own sweet fashion, but in his, and she was vaguely aware of it, yet curiously passive and content to put no question to herself whether it was true or false. And how it might be with him she evaded asking herself too. Only the quickening of breath and pulse questioned the pure thoughts unvoiced; only the increasing impatience of her suspense confirmed the answer which now, perhaps, she might give him one day while the blessed world was young.

He had not yet spoken when again she lifted her eyes and saw him sitting in the dusk, one arm resting across his knee, his body bent slightly forward, his gaze vacant.

He did not stir. Then unreasoning instinctive fear confused her, and she heard her own voice, sounding strangely in the twilight:

"Why you are so silent with me. What has crept in between us? I"—the innocent courage sustaining her—"I have not changed, except a little in—in the way you wished. Have you?"

"No," he said in an altered voice.

"Then what is it? I have been—you have left me so much alone this winter, and I supposed I understood"—

"My work," he said, but she scarcely knew the voice for his.

"I know; you have had no time. I know that. I ought to know it by this time, for I have told myself often enough. And yet when we are together it is—it has been—different. Can you tell me why? Do you think me changed?"

"You must not change," he said.

The mounting sea of passion swept him. He turned on her unsteadily, his hands clinched, not daring to touch her. Shame, contrition, horror that the damage was already done, all were forgotten. Only the deadly grim duty of the moment held him back.

"Dear," he said, "because I am unchanged—because I—I love you so—help me, and God help us both!"

"Tell me," she said steadily, but it was fear that stilled her voice. She laid one slim hand on the table, bearing down on the points of her fingers until the nails whitened, but her head was high and her eyes met his, straight, unwavering.

"I—I knew it," she said. "I understood there was something. If it is trouble, and I see it is, bring it to me. If I am the woman you took me for, give me my part in this. It is the quickest way to my heart, Captain Selwyn. I ask it."

"Why?"

Her eyes wavered, then returned his gaze:

"For love of you," she said, as white as death.

He caught his breath sharply and straightened out, passing one hand across his eyes. When she saw his face again in the dim light it was ghastly.

"There was a woman," he said, "for whom I was once responsible." He spoke wearily, head bent, resting the weight of one arm on the table against which she leaned. "Do you understand?" he asked.

"Yes. You mean—Mrs. Ruthven."

"I mean her. Afterward, when matters had altered, I came home."

He raised his head and looked about him in the darkness.

"Came home," he repeated, "no longer a man—the shadow of a man, with no hope, no outlook, no right to hope."

He leaned heavily on the table, his arm rigid, looking down at the floor as he spoke.

"No right to hope. Others told me that I still possessed that right. I knew they were wrong. I do not mean that they persuaded me. I persuaded myself that, after all, perhaps my right to hope remained to me. I persuaded myself that I might be, after all, the substance, not the shadow."

He looked up at her.

"And so I dared to love you."

She gazed at him, scarcely breathing.

"Then," he said, "came the awakening. My dream had ended."

She waited, the lace on her breast scarce stirring, so still she stood, so pitifully still.

"Such responsibility cannot die while those live who undertook it. I believed it until I desired to believe it no longer."

He took one step toward her, and his voice fell so low that she could just hear him.

"She has lost her mind, and the case is hopeless. Those to whom the laws of the land have given care of her turned on her, threatened her with disgrace. And when one friend of hers halted this miserable conspiracy her malady came swiftly upon her, and suddenly she found herself helpless, penniless, abandoned, her mind already clouded and clouding faster. Eileen, was there then the shadow of a doubt as to the responsibility? I dare not utter one word of love to you. I dare not touch you. What chance is there for such a man as I?"

"No chance—for us," she whispered. "Go!"

For a second he stood motionless, then, swaying slightly, turned on his heel.

And long after he had left the house she still stood there, eyes closed, colorless lips set, her slender body quivering, racked with the first fierce grief of a woman's love for a man.

Chapter 26

NEERGARD had already begun to make mistakes. The first was in thinking that, among those whose only distinction was their wealth, his own wealth permitted him the same insolence and ruthlessness that so frequently characterized them.

He had sneeringly dispensed with Gerald; he had shouldered Fane and Harmon out of his way when they objected to the purchase of Neergard's acreage adjoining the Siowitha preserve and its incorporation as an integral portion of the club tract; thus he was preparing to rid himself of Ruthven, for another reason. But he was not yet quite ready to spare Ruthven, because he wanted a little more out of him, just enough to place him on a secure footing among those of the younger set where Ruthven, as back cotillon leader, was regarded by the young with wide eyed awe.

Gladys Orchil.

Why Neergard, who had forced himself into the Siowitha, ever came to commit so gross a blunder as to dragoon or even permit the club to acquire the acreage, the exploiting of which had threatened their existence, is not very clear.

Already the familiarity of his appearance and his name seemed to sanction his presence. Two minor clubs, but good ones—in need of dues—had strained at this social camel and swallowed him. Card rooms welcomed him—not the rooms once flung open contemptuously for his plucking, but rooms where play was fiercer and where those who faced him expected battle to the limit.

And they got it, for he no longer felt obliged to lose. And that again was a mistake. He could not yet afford to win.

George Fane, unpleasantly involved in Block Copper, angry, but not very much frightened, turned in casual good faith to Neergard to ease matters until he could cover. And Neergard locked him in the tighter and shouldered his way through Rosamund's drawing room to the sill of Sanxon Orchil's outer office, treading brutally on Harmon's heels.

Harmon in disgust, wrath and fear went to Craig; Craig to Maxwell Hunt; Hunt wired Mottly; Mottly, cold and sleek in his contempt, came from Palm Beach.

The cohesive power of caste is an unknown element to the outsider.

That he had unwittingly and prematurely aroused some unsuspected force on which he had not counted and of which he had no definite knowledge was revealed to Neergard when he desired Rosamund to obtain for him an invitation to the Orchils' ball.

It appeared that she could not do so—that even the threatened tenderness of Block Copper could not sharpen her wits to devise a way for him. Very innocently she told him that Jack Ruthven was leading the Chinese cotillon with Miss Delmour-Carnes from one end, Gerald Erroll with Gladys from the other—a hint that a card ought to be easy enough to obtain in spite of the strangely forgetful Orchils.

Long since he had fixed upon Gladys Orchil as the most suitable silent partner for the unbuilt house of Neergard, unconcerned that rumor was already sending her abroad for the double purpose of getting rid of Gerald and of giving deserving aristocracy a look in at the fresh youth of her and her selling price.

He had come on various occasions close to the unruffled skirts of this young girl—not yet, however, in her own house. But Sanxon Orchil had recently condescended to turn around in his office chair and leave his amusing railroad combinations long enough to divide with Neergard a quarter of a million copper profits, and there was another turn to be expected when Neergard gave the word.

Therefore it puzzled and confused Neergard to be overlooked where the gay world had been summoned with an accompanying blast from the public press; therefore he had gone to Rosamund with the curtest of hints that he would like to have a card to the Orchil affair.

"There is no use in speaking to George," she said, shaking her head.

"Try it," returned Neergard, with a hint of a snarl. And he took his leave and his hat from the man in waiting, who looked after him with the slightest twitching of his shaven upper lip, for the lifting of an eyebrow in the drawing rooms becomes warrant for a tip that runs very swiftly below stairs.

That afternoon, alone in his office, Neergard remembered Gerald, and for the first time he understood the mistake of making an enemy out of what he had known only as a friendly fool.

But it was a detail, after all—merely a slight error in assuming too early an arrogance he could have afforded to wait for. He had waited a long, long while for some things.

As for Fane, he had him locked up with his short account. No doubt he'd hear from the Orchils through the Fanes. However, to clinch the matter he thought he might as well stop in to see Ruthven.

So that afternoon he took a hansom at Broad and Wall streets and rolled smoothly uptown, not seriously concerned, but willing to have a brief understanding with Ruthven on one or two subjects.

As his cab drove up to the intricately ornamental little house of gray stone a big touring limousine wheeled out from the curb, and he caught sight of Sanxon Orchil and Phoenix Mottly inside, evidently just leaving Ruthven.

His smiling and very cordial bow was returned coolly by Orchil and apparently not observed at all by Mottly. He sat a second in his cab motionless, the obsequious smile still stiffened on his flushed face. Then the flush darkened. He got out of his cab and, bidding the man wait, rang at the house of Ruthven.

Ruthven in a lounging suit of lilac silk, sashed in with twisted silver, stood with his back to the door as Neergard was announced, and even after he was announced Ruthven took his time to turn and stare and nod with a deliberate negligence that accented the affront.

Neergard sat down. Ruthven gazed out of the window, then, both thumbs hooked in his sash, turned leisurely in impudent interrogation.

"What is the matter with you?" asked Neergard. "I see there's some trouble somewhere. What is it? What's the matter with Orchil and that hatchet faced beagle pup, Mottly? Is there anything the matter, Jack?"

"Nothing important," said Ruthven, with an intonation which troubled Neergard. "Did you come here to—ah—ask anything of me? Very glad to do anything, I'm sure."

"Are you? Well, then, I want a card to the Orchils'."

"Awfully sorry."

"You mean you won't?"

"Well, if you really insist, they—ah—don't want you, Neergard."

"Who—why—how do you happen to know that they don't? Is this some petty spite of that young cub, Gerald, or"—and he almost looked at Ruthven—"is this some childish whim of yours?"

"Oh, really now"—

"Yes, really now," sneered Neergard, "you'd better tell me. And you'd better understand now, once for all, just exactly what I've outlined for myself so you can steer clear of the territory I operate in. I need a little backing, but I can get along without it. And what I'm going to do is to marry Miss Orchil. Now you know; now you understand. I don't care a hang about the Erroll boy, and I think I'll discount right now any intentions of any married man to bother Miss Orchil after some Dakota decree frees him from the woman whom he's driven into an asylum."

Ruthven looked at him curiously.

"So that is discounted, is it?"

"I think so," nodded Neergard. "I don't think that man will try to obtain a divorce until I say the word."

"Oh, why not?"

"Because of my knowledge concerning that man's crooked methods in obtaining for me certain options that meant ruin to his own country club," said Neergard coolly.

"I see. How extraordinary! But the club has bought in all that land, hasn't it?"

"Yes, but the stench of your treachery remains, my friend."

PRELIMINARY HEARING OF CHARGES AGAINST SHEPHERD

DID NOT ELECT.

Mr. G. N. Gordon said he would not elect and asked that witnesses on both sides be excluded. This was done.

Mr. Wood said that the official stenographer was not present, but he had a copy of the evidence signed by the reporter, and he suggested that the case be proceeded with. The official stenographer would be present on Saturday, and his evidence would be taken then.

Mr Gordon said not see why he should facilitate the trial more than he had to.

It was decided to go ahead with the hearing of the charges.

H. S. Wood who, acted as registrar of the election court during the trial, gave evidence to the effect that Mr. Justice McMahon and Mr. Justice Magee presided at the trial, and that he had been officially appointed registrar. He had received a letter from Mr. Homestead, the registrar of the High Court at Toronto, notifying him to act as registrar. "The first business is the appointment of a registrar, and I appoint Mr. Wood," Justice McMahon had said at the opening of the election trial.

J. G. M. WILSON CALLED.

J. G. M. Wilson, who was next called, said he was employed in the C.G.E. Electric Co., and had been for a number of years. He was not present at the election trial.

Mr. Wood read from the official report of the evidence at the trial to the effect that witness was a party to an agreement to engage Shepherd.

"Is that allegation true?" Mr. Wood asked.

Witness said it was not.

Shepherd's evidence to the effect that Wilson had with Mr. Kendrey engaged him to act as a detective on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 20, 1908, at Mr. Kendrey's office was also read and witness was asked if it were true.

"I deny that absolutely."

"Did anything happen that could be construed into meaning that?"

"No."

"Mr. Kendrey, Mr. Shepherd and myself were the only persons present in Mr. Kendrey's office on the Sunday in question," witness said.

To Mr. Gordon Mr. Wilson said he was not a worker for Mr. Burnham at the last election. He did not canvass even one man for Mr. Burnham at the election.

"You have a telephone in your room at the White House?"

"Yes, I have had a telephone in my room for over a year."

"Did Mr. Burnham or any of his agents pay for a whole or the part of the cost of the telephone?"

"No, not to my knowledge. I have not paid anything for it yet, as no bill has been presented."

To further questions witness said that no one had suggested to him having a telephone in his room. Mr. Burnham had never mentioned it.

"Were you chairman of No. 1 Ward during the election?"

"No."

"Were you an officer of the Young Conservative Club at that time?"

"I think I was."

"Did you ever receive bills for long distance messages over the telephone?"

"No."

"There were such messages?"

"No."

Witness said he had gone up Water street and Shepherd had gone up George street on the Sunday they went to Mr. Kendrey's office. This was done at Shepherd's request.

"Did you know why you and Shepherd went on different streets?"

"No."

"Where did you meet?"

"At the Grand Trunk bridge."

"How long did you stay in Mr. Kendrey's office?"

"Possibly an hour."

"Would it be two hours?"

"No."

"What did you talk about in the office?"

"The election generally."

"Were Shepherd's affairs discussed?"

"No, not particularly."

At the office of Mr. Kendrey Shepherd opened the election talk by stating that he was dissatisfied with the Liberal party and wanted to work for the Conservatives. He had been promised things by Mr. Stratton and had not received them.

"Did Mr. Kendrey encourage him in this laudable object?" Mr. Gordon asked.

"I couldn't say."

"Did you?"

"No. I took no part in the conversation at all."

"What conclusions did you draw as to where Shepherd stood politically after that afternoon's conversation?"

"I didn't draw any."

"You had no idea how Shepherd was going to vote?"

"No."

"Did Mr. Kendrey say he would see Shepherd through if he worked for the Conservatives?"

"No."

"Did he say anything to that effect?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"He could have said it without your knowledge?"

"I would have heard it if he did."

Witness said he had talked to Mr. Kendrey about Shepherd's evidence on Sept. 27th, and there might have been mention made of having Shepherd arrested for perjury. Mr. Kendrey had told witness to take action against Shepherd to protect his reputation.

"Were you ever down the river with Brundrette when Shepherd was there?"

"Yes."

"When?"

"From August 29th to August 30th, 1908."

"Was Shepherd there?"

"He came afterwards."

"Did you suggest to Shepherd that he support Mr. Burnham?"

"No."

Witness said Shepherd had not made reports to him as to what he was doing.

Mr Gordon and Mr. Wood clashed on the point as to whether Mr. Gordon had the right to ask witness whether Mr. Waddell had told him that Farrah was getting in some good work.

Mr. Gordon said the question had been answered and he was not going to ask it again.

Witness admitted that he had seen some letters which Shepherd had sent to Mr. Waddell. Mr. Gordon produced the letters and showed them to witness.

An objection from Mr. Wood brought the statement from Mr. Gordon that "he should not be held too strictly to the rules of evidence in this case."

Mr. Gordon read one of the letters Shepherd wrote to Waddell.

Witness could not swear that Waddell had not told him that he had received money from Shepherd.

The letters from Shepherd to Waddell were handed in as exhibits by Mr. Gordon.

Mr. Dumble said that there was nothing to show that they were what was purported they were, and they could not be accepted as evidence.

"All right, then," Mr. Gordon said, "I can't force them on the court."

"Did you give or lend any money to Shepherd during the election campaign?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"Will you swear you did not?"

"I will swear that to my knowledge I did not."

This concluded the cross-examination of Mr. Wilson.

JAMES KENDREY.

James Kendrey, who was next called, said he lived in Peterborough and was a supporter of the Conservative party. He was always at his office on Sunday afternoon, his library being there. He recollected Mr. Wilson and Shepherd coming to his office on Sunday afternoon Sept. 20, 1908. A prior appointment had been made. Witness was introduced to Shepherd by Wilson.

Mr. Wood read from Shepherd's evidence to the effect that "Kendrey appeared tickled when told what had happened at the Anglers' cottage down the river, and that Kendrey was pleased and seemed anxious for me to go ahead and do Stratton up."

Mr. Kendrey said that that portion of Shepherd's evidence was not true.

Another portion of Shepherd's evidence was read to the effect that there had been an arrangement made whereby Shepherd was to appear to be working for the Liberals and secure all the evidence he could for the Conservatives.

"There was no such arrangement. These words are not true," Mr. Kendrey said.

"Was there anything that could be construed into an arrangement of that kind?"

"There was not."

To Mr. Gordon Mr. Kendrey said he had received a telephone message from Mr. Wilson arranging an interview, which was done. Wilson said he wanted to introduce Shepherd to witness.

Regarding the interview, Mr. Kendrey said that Shepherd had said he was disgruntled with the Liberals and volunteered to work for the Conservatives.

"Did you acquiesce to him coming into line?"

"No."

"That's strange. That would be one vote [illegible] on your side and one more on the other."

"Well, I suppose you know a good deal about that," Mr. Kendrey remarked to Mr. Gordon.

A few nights after the Sunday interview Shepherd came to house of witness and stated that he knew the Liberals were paying money and he could get some of it. Witness did not ask Shepherd who was getting money or who was paying it out. Mr. Kendrey said that the Conservatives suspected corruption and that detectives had been employed.

Mr. Kendrey refused to answer further questions along this line.

Mr. Gordon said that the witness was showing contempt of court in not answering when Mr. Kendrey asked Mr. Gordon to repeat a question which the lawyer had put to him rather rapidly.

"Did any person speak to you about Shepherd before the election?"

"No."

"Did Peter Gardner, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Waddell or Mr. Burnham tell you that there were detectives working in the Liberal committee rooms?"

"No."

Mr. Kendrey swore that they had never offered Shepherd a cent.

Coming back to the interview at Mr. Kendrey's office on the Sunday afternoon Mr. Kendrey stated that nothing whatever was mentioned about something happening down the river.

"Did you see these men (Wilson and Shepherd) leaving your office?"

"Yes."

"Were they together?"

"Yes going out of the door."

Mr. Kendrey was also questioned on a few other points of minor importance before stepping down.

R. M. WADDELL.

R. M. Waddell was called by Mr. Gordon after Mr. Kendrey had retired.

He met Mr. Shepherd three times during the campaign. The first occasion he remembered meeting him was at Mr. Kendrey's house with Mr. Kendrey present. Shepherd made some suggestions then. He suggested he'd give certain assistance in Mr. Burnham's interests. He was to use his own judgment. Mr. Gordon and Mr. Wood had a tilt regarding the line of questioning that might be taken up in the examination of Mr. Waddell.

Mr. Waddell said he went up to Mr. Kendrey's house in company with Mr. Peter Gardner on the night of the meeting with Shepherd he had referred to. Shepherd volunteered to give information of the Liberal movements to Mr. Waddell, Mr. Kendrey or other responsible members of the party. The conversation with Shepherd was only a short one. Messrs. Waddell and Gardner drove down from Mr. Kendrey's house and took Shepherd with them to the corner of Brock and Water streets he thought. A letter and statements were produced by Mr. Gordon and Mr. Waddell said he had received the letters and the reports from Shepherd. He turned the reports over to the different committees that would be most interested in them. Mr. Weddell saw Mr. Wilson at the committee rooms probably once or twice. Mr. Kendrey was there frequently. Witness was at the White House several times during the campaign. He wouldn't say how often he had been at Mr. Wilson's room at the White House during the campaign. He didn't remember meeting Shepherd there during the period immediately preceding the campaign. He might have met him. Shepherd received about $35 from Mr. Waddell for his services for certain reports he had turned in. Mr. Waddell identified some of the reports shown in court. He couldn't definitely say who had made the arrangement that Shepherd was to be paid for his services. He didn't make any. He presumed Gardner told him that the arrangement with Shepherd had been made.

"Mr. Shepherd didn't want to be seen with us when he was giving the information."

Witness had no recollection of Mr. Wilson saying he had paid Shepherd any money. The information the witness got was not for his own benefit but for that of the party.

The money the witness got was from Peter Gardner. On the night he went to Mr. Kendrey's house Mr. Shepherd was not there. He and Mr. Gardner preceded him. Witness had heard that Mr. Shepherd might be there. Shepherd came in very shortly after they arrived. Mr. Shepherd said he wanted to support Mr. Burnham and do what he could for him. He may have said he would obtain infromation for the Conservative party. At that meeting Shepherd said he wanted to support Mr. Burnham. He mentioned at the time that his family was hard up and said he would request remuneration for his services. The witness wouldn't say whether this was the night of the 22nd or later on in the week. Mr. Kendrey said Shepherd's family wouldn't starve. Shepherd was to use his own judgment. He received no instructions. As far as the witness recollected he only paid Shepherd $35. There was an envelope left with Mr. Wilson for Shepherd. Witness said he didn't remember whether the money was left with Mr. Wilson by Mr. Gardner or himself. There was $20—two tens—in the envelope. He naturally thought the money was given to Shepherd. Shepherd kept asking for money from the witness. He was paid up shortly before the election. Shepherd may have made demands on him for money that weren't satisfied. Mr. Gordon questioned the witness as to whether there were "other detectives" employed, but the court ruled that the question was not a proper one. Mr. Waddell wouldn't say that Shepherd said at the meeting at Mr. Kendrey's house that he expected to get most of his information from the Liberal committee rooms. Mr. Waddell said he was an active worker for and supporter of Mr. Burnham.

After Mr. Waddell had concluded the giving of his evidence the court adjourned at one o'clock for luncheon the case being enlarged until 3 o'clock this afternoonn.

LATER.

His Worship Magistrate Dumble dismissed the first charge against Shepherd at four o'clock this afternoon. The second charge is now being gone on with.

TREES ARE ALL BEING PRUNED

In Little Lake Cemetery--General Cleaning up Also Taking Place

Superintendent Wise, of the Little Lake cemetery, is having all the trees in the cemetery pruned this fall. This has not been done for nine years and the removal of the superfluous branches and foliage will have the effect of giving the trees a much neater appearance and also of doing away with too much shade, which was becoming detrimental to the growth of the grass. The general fall cleaning up is also taking place.

SIR FREDERICK DENIES CHARGES OF IMPROPRIETY

Minister of Militia and Defence Goes Into Stand and Says Although He Knew Family, There Had Been Nothing Wrong—Identifies Initial "B."

Kentville, N.S., Oct. 15.—Interest in the Borden v. Carruther's case was intensified yesterday afternoon when Sir Frederick Borden took the witness stand. The libel complained of in the defendant having circulated copies of The Calgary Eye-Opener containing letters written by Mrs. Maria Allison alleging improper conduct between Sir Frederick Borden and Hester Chalefour, her daughter.

Sir Frederick underwent a gruelling cross-examination, and flatly denied the allegations of the witnesses for the defence. The inquiry took a very broad turn.

Miss Chalefour yesterday morning, while declaring that she had received $2,000 from Borden and saying he had called on her, denied positively that there had been any improprieties.

Sir Frederick Borden in his evidence swore that he had never called on her or taken any interest in her.

Mrs. McPharland absolutely denied all Mrs. Allison's evidence. She had only met Sir Frederick once, and that was in regard to The Eye-Opener article. Mrs. Allison's statements were untrue, every word of them. She had never received pay from the Government for services not rendered.

Counsel and judge will address the jury to-day.

When the court opened yesterday afternoon Sir Frederick was in the ante-room, while the court-room was crowded. After two unimportant witnesses had been heard, Sir Frederick was called to the witness stand. He said he was Minister of Militia and Defence; was formerly known as Dr. Borden, being a medical practitioner.

He had lodgings and boarded there. Judge Forbes, then member for Queen's, and other M.P.'s and other men were there.

He knew the daughter, Hester M. Chalefour. Mrs. Borden had told him of Miss Chalefour's application for a position in the hospital. Arthur M. Dickey, himself and another had signed the recommendation. He saw Miss Chalefour at her mother's house about three months after she went to Montreal. She came back to her mother's house over Sunday and went back to Montreal. When next he saw her it was about Christmas, in Ottawa, on the street. He saw her very seldom from that time on, and did not see her in the United States. He thought he met her on the streets of Montreal several times, but had no particular conversation with her.

Sir Frederick knew nothing of Mrs. Archambault, keeper of a Montreal boarding-house, who he said he had never seen. He had never visited her house in Montreal, nor any house in Montreal for the purpose of meeting Miss Chalefour. He had never visited her on St. Lawrence street, or Dufferin square.

A copy of the The Eye-Opener was produced and the alleged libel was read. Sir Frederick said he knew nothing of Miss Chalefour's reasons for leaving home. The allegation that he was keeping her in a boarding-house at 862 Palace street, was false. He provided no means for her staying there, and did not know Madame Clement and had never seen Miss Chalefour at Madame Clement's, or at Ellen Williams'. He had never heard of Dr. Dukebury's place in Boston. He had heard she had a house at Outremount, but had never seen her there, nor in Boston. He had never made improper proposals with her. He never was to the Stanley House, Montreal, with her, and did not register as "Mr. and Mrs. Brown."

Sir Frederick said he never paid $2,000 to Miss Chalefour, nor had he paid her any money.

Sir Frederick said that while Miss Chalefour was in Boston last week, he had not seen her. Miss Chalefour had visited him in his office in 1897 and 1898, to tell him her troubles at home. There never was any impropriety in the visits, which were made in the day time. Sir Frederick said he had left Mrs. Allison's house in consequence of her interfering with her daughter.

Miss Chalefour yesterday morning declared that certain letters, produced, had been written by her, but at the instigation of her mother, who desired to get evidence. "This rubbish is mine," she admitted, when one letter was read, which said: "We used to go to the Stanley Hotel and register as Mr. and Mrs. Brown. Had I not been so tied down I would have had him divorced and married him. I have more experience now. I would have a claim on his estate as a common law wife, and I shall make the claim."

"All I said in those letters was absolutely all lies—tommyrot," she asserted. In 1908 she had written to her mother for $50, but didn't get it.

In one letter the initial "B" appeared. At first she said it referred to one Polly Burns; later she admitted it stood for Borden. She had said a person could identify Sir Frederick as her uncle from a photograph. Her elderly admirers she always called uncle.

Witness said she met lots of men, Sir Frederick among them, at a house of assignation. She had stayed there three weeks, but nothing improper had occurred with anyone.

She identified a photo of a house as one towards which she had paid $1,000 of Sir Frederick's money. "Sir Frederick hauled the first thousand out of his pocket," she said. "The second $1,000 was paid to her two years ago in Sir Frederick's office. The last time she called he had the money in his pocket. This was all the money she had got from him."

To Mr. Wickwire, witness insisted that the letters had been written to her mother at the latter's instigation to make evidence for blackmailing Borden. She swore that she never had had improper relations with him.

ARE AGAINST "JOY RIDERS"

Toronto, Oct. 15.—An "anti joy riding" crusade is being propagated by the Ontario Motor League.

Sir James Whitney has been asked by that organiaztion to bring a bill before the Legislature making the unauthorised use of motor vehicles punishable offences.

The festive chauffeur whose pleasure making instincts lead him to exceed the speed limit is the cause of this action.

The motor league asks that the following clause be added, which has been adopted by New York State:

"Any chauffeur or other person who, without the consent of the owner, shall take or cause to be taken from a garage, stable or other building, an automobile or motor vehicle and operate or drive or cause the same to be operated or driven for his own profit, use or other profit, steal the same, and is guilty of larceny, and shall be punished accordingly."

If you only knew what comfort "CATSPAW" Rubber Heels will bring, you would put them on at once. Ask shoe dealers or repairers.

WIFE DID NOT SEE THE JOKE

Hamilton, Oct. 15.—Arthur F. Zimmerman, who was arrested on the charge of bigamy for the Brooklyn police, and afterwards released, says that it all came about through a joke he played on his wife. He says that for fun he wrote her stating that she was but one of seven or eight wives, and that he was about to contract another alliance. His wife took these communications to the police, and that was what led to his arrest.

Arrested In England.

Brantford, Ont., Oct. 15.—William Thurston, who was tenant on a farm near this city belonging to William Brittain, is under arrest in London, Eng., charged with fraud involving $270, he having sailed on the Virginian with his family recently. Whether he will be brought back or not, will be a matter for the consideration of the Attorney-General's Department.

WAS KILLED BY FATHER'S WAGGON

Toronto, Oct. 15.—Little Freddie LeBarr, 5 years old, climbed upon his father's wagon for a ride as he was leaving the brickyard. This is not unusual, and the father paid but little attention. The roads in that section of the city are of a sandy nature, and the heavy wagons had worn deep ruts. It was the jar created in crossing one of these that caused the little chap to lose his hold and fall under one of the wheels of the wagon, which crushed him so badly that he died later at the Sick Children's Hospital.

TRIO OF CAR PLANTS MERGE

St. John, N.B., Oct. 15.—The new car merger just consummated, the capital stock of which is $8,500,000, is composed of Rhodes, Curry & Co. of Amherst; the Canada Car Co., and the Dominion Foundry Co. of Montreal. N. Curry of Amherst will be general manager. All bonds have been sold, and two-thirds of the preferred stock to London capitalists.

The Canada Car Co., of which the largest stockholders are: Charles R. Hosmer and H. S. Holt of Montreal, E. R. Wood of Toronto, and E. Pearse of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, was controlled by Kelly of Chicago. There will be three plants, two in Montreal and one in Amherst.

JOSEPH GILPIN WAS CHASED BY WOLVES

Ottawa, Oct. 15.—Farmers' flocks in the back townships of Pontiac County are suffering very heavily this year from wolves, which seem to have been driven from their haunts in the woods because of lack of game.

Joseph Gilpin, bailiff of Otter Lake, near Shawville, was coming along one of the bush roads in Huddersfield in his buggy a few nights ago when a pack of wolves took up the trail and soon dashed out of the woods into the road. The brutes snapped at the horse several times and one caught the animal by the knee, and almost caused it to fall. It was only by driving furiously that he escaped.

MRS. OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH. FROM STEREOGRAPH COPYRIGHT, 1909 BY UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N.Y.

MARK TWAIN'S ITALIAN VILLA AT REDDING, CONN.

In the drawing room of Stormfield, the country home of Mark Twain, last week, amid decorations of evergreens, autumn leaves and roses, the American humorist's daughter, Miss Clara Clemens, was married to Mr. Ossip Gabrilowitch, a well known Russian pianist. Present as guests were forty men and women well known in society, artistic and literary circles, principally of New York city. The father of the bride was a picturesque figure in the scarlet cap and gown he wore when Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor of literature. After the ceremony he changed to a suit of white flannel.

With characteristic originality Mr. Clemens interviewed himself in advance on the wedding, on marriage in general, the identity and characteristics of his guests, his own health and other subjects having little or nothing to do with the case, and handed a copy to those who asked, giving as a reason that he wished to "avoid any delays at the wedding." In it he revealed a bit of romance in connection with his daughter's engagement. He said it had been broken twice. Recently the pianist has been recovering from a severe operation at the Clemens country home. During that time the engagement was renewed, and to-day's wedding followed.

BIG LINER IS STRANDED ATHABASCA IS ASHORE

Assinaboia Brings News to Owen Sound That Big Vessel is on a Rock at Flower Pots Island, About 80 Miles From Georgian Bay Port.

Owen Sound, Ont., Oct. 15.—In a terrible snowstorm, accompanied by a southwest gale, the Canadian Pacific Railway steamer Athabasca, Capt. Alex. Brown, went on a shelving rock at the Flower Pots Island, 80 miles from here, shortly after one o'clock yesterday morning. The steamer cleared at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon on her regular trip up to Fort William. She had a cargo of about six hundred tons of general merchandise and two first-class passengers, and one second-class, on her list.

Word of her mishap was brought to this port by the company's steamer Assinaboia, which passed the stranded vessel on her way down from Fort William at 6.30 yesterday morning. Capt. Brown reported that the water was four feet deep in the forward hold, the ship's bow being 50 feet on a flat rock, with the main part afloat in 15 fathoms of water. The spot is within 200 feet of the lighthouse and half a mile from the regular course.

In a megaphone conversation with the Assinaboia, Capt. Brown said he had endeavored to get a call for assistance through by Tobermoray on a passing tug.

From appearances it was thought that the steamer might release herself before assistance arrived.

C.P.R. Superintendent Buchanan chartered the tug Tarrison, one of the largest on the lakes, and went to the relief of the vessel yesterday afternoon. The company's steamer Manitoba, which will pass the point on her up trip last night, may also render assistance.

The Athabasca is one of the trio of Clyde built steamers, brought to the Upper Lakes by the C.P.R. on the opening of through traffic in 1884. She is 270 feet long, and was brought to this country with the steamers Alberta and Algoma, the latter of which was wrecked the following year, with great loss of life. The Alberta is now in harbor.

In the opinion of the officers of the Assinaboia, the Athabasca wil be saved, unless the wind changes. Should the wind come from the north it is likely the big liner will be driven to pieces on the rocks.

Since the new steamships Assinaboia and Keewatin were placed on the line the smaller vessels of the Athabasca class have been out of commission at intervals. The Athabasca was put in the service at the end of September for the fall trade, and this was her second trip.

AUTOMOBILE PARTY NARROWLY ESCAPES

Melbourne, Ont., Oct. 15.—In their 45-horse-power touring car, running at the rate of 30 miles an hour, a Toronto party consisting of Mrs. S. Gallagher, her two daughters and her sister, who were returning from Detroit, escaped death last night when the chauffeur was forced to take a 40-foot embankment when he struck a piece of bad road a few miles from this village.

Mrs. Gallagher and the chauffeur, Arthur Hastings, were thrown heavily against a fence, a picket of which tore the young man's side. Mrs. Gallagher had only a few bruises and the other ladies landed in a pile of sand. The car was put out of business and it required a traction car to haul it back on to the road.

RECORDS THERE TO PROVE, SAYS COOK

Atlantic City, N.J., Oct. 15.—Expressing astonishment at the statement of Edward Barrill, Dr. Cook yesterday maintained that he had ascended to the summit of Mount McKinley, and said further that if an expedition will follow the route he took they will find the records deposited by him at the summit of the mount.

Cook was given a military escort here.

New York, Oct. 15.—The Globe yesterday afternoon prints a copy of the affidavit made by Edwin N. Barrill, who accompanied Dr. Fred. A. Cook, at the time he announced his reaching the summit of Mount McKinley. The affidavit was made before a notary public at Tacoma, Wash., on Oct. 4, and states in effect that he was the only person present with Cook, on the day he claims to have reached the summit. Instead, the nearest point obtain was 14 miles from the top.

The records of a pocket diary, which he kept, were altered to suit the claims by Cook's orders, he says.

HIGH TENSION IN EUROPE

Execution of Ferrer Causes Riots Throughout the Country.

Rome, Oct. 15.—Indignation meetings were held throughout Italy yesterday in consequence of Wednesday's events at Barcelona.

In this city the protest against the execution of Ferrer has brought business almost to a standstill. Workmen generally have abandoned their employment. No street cars are being operated and cabs and automobiles remain at their stations with no one to take them out. The whole normal life of the city is interrupted.

Among the masses the feeling grows more turbulent as the people attribute the execution of the revolutionist to reactionism, Vatican influence and Jesuit support.

The Spanish and Austrian embassies and the Vatican are closely guarded by troops and it is thought that the measures adopted by the police and military authorities will prevent serious outbreaks.

Paris Casualties.

Paris, Oct. 15.—The police records show that one policeman was killed and 76 persons wounded during Wednesday's rioting. Among those arrested were five notorious anarchists.

BIG RALLY OF CONSERVATIVE FORCES IS BEING PLANNED

R. L. Borden at Halifax Meeting Says Extreme Length of Sessions Has Delayed Gathering, But it Will be Held in 1910.

Halifax, N.S., Oct. 15.—It was a large and representative audience which greeted R. L. Borden in the Masonic Hall last evening. It was Mr. Borden's first political address since his return from Europe, and was listened to with keen interest. It was also his first visit to his constituency since the last session, and the leader was given a royal welcome and greeted with round upon round of applause during his address.

The feature of the address was the announcement that plans were in the making for a Liberal-Conservative convention. Two years ago, on his own initiative, he had, after a consultation with many friends throughout Canada, made known his "Halifax platform." Public opinion not only of the party, but of the country had ratified that policy to such an extent that the present Government had made the pretence at least of adopting many of its provisions, either in whole or in part, for instance, in regard to civil service reform, the inauguration of a system of rural mail delivery, the reorganization of the Railway Commissions, the control and management of the Government railways by an independent commission and the reformation of the electoral laws.

The calling of a convention had been under consideration for nearly four years, but had been delayed because of the extreme length of the sessions and the importance of conducting active and strenuous campaigns in 1907 and 1908.

"But," said Mr. Borden, "the time has now come when this important step should be no longer delayed, and I am glad to announce that during the year 1910 we expect to hold a great convention of the Liberal-Conservative party of Canada, thoroughly representative, not only of every province, but of every important district within each province.

"Great questions will come before that convention for consideration and determination. These will include not only great questions of policy, but matters touching the thoroughly effective organization of the party; and it is not too much to say that the result of the next general elections—which may be held even earlier than we now expect—will depend upon the enthusiasm and vigor with which the Conservatives of Canada unite in making that convention the splendid success I believe it will be."

STEAMER HITS SUNKEN WRECK

Montreal, Oct. 15.—Information was received here late yesterday afternoon at the C.P.R. offices that the Empress of Ireland had struck a submerged wreck at a point between Cape Chatte and Matane, and had a hole punched in her bow. The steamer reached Rimouski at 4.45 yesterday afternoon, and proceeded for Quebec under her own steam, from which fact it is supposed she is not badly damaged, as otherwise her 1,100 passengers would have been landed at that point had the ship been in danger.

LABOR TROUBLES IN OHIO STATE

Toledo, Ohio, Oct. 14.—When a vote of 196 to 15 the Ohio Federation of Labor yesterday sealed a number of so-called "Insurgent" delegates, 100 delegates, representing fifteen organizations immediately withdrew in a turmoil, and called a rival convention.

National Organizer M. Grant Hamilton, speaking as the representative of the national council, said that the dispute involved the perpetuity of the union labor movement. Max Hayes, of Cleveland, a leader in the fight to seat the "Insurgents," declared that a crisis has been reached where it is to be determined whether the democracy of the labor moveemnt shall be maintained.

The fight here is regarded as a preliminary to a sharper conflict in the American Federation of Labor Convention at Toronto next month.

THREE HUNDRED ARE DROWNED

Victoria, B.C., Oct. 15.—The steamer Maori King, over which there was so much litigation at Shanghai, was totally wrecked on Longshuahe Island, Chusan group, and broke up, the after portion sinking in thirteen fathoms.

The wreck was due to returning to the island to land a dead Chinaman, whose shipmates threatened to mutiny when a sea burial was suggested. The vessel was driven ashore while anchored off the island. The ship's company escaped in boats.

At Foochow, South China, several junks, lighters and sampans foundered, with much loss of life, probably over 300 being drowned. Near Pakoda sixty were drowned.

FRIDAY, OCT. 15, 1909.

THE NEW NAVY

The new navy idea of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's administration is likely to get Canada into a heap of trouble. To begin with twenty millions of dollars has been appropriated to build the first instalment of our fleet. It will cost two to three millions a year for repairs and for salaries and maintenance, not less than five millions more. It is quite probable that twenty per cent may be added to all these sums and then we are likely to be within the mark.

The proposition of the Conservatives was a contribution of two Dreadnoughts. This would have meant about one-third the expense of the other plan all round, and it would have been more acceptable since it is an addition to the centrally-controlled power and not a lot of outriders of the sea. Coast defences are easily provided for by mines and such like inexpensive modern methods.

But here we are with a millstone ruthlessly placed about our neck in the most burthensome possible manner, all because Canada is not to be permitted to touch the federation of the empire with a ten-foot pole. Anything rather than union. This fantastic prejudice in favour of Canadian independence is said in more ways than one. It cripples us tremendously. Twenty millions and eight millions a year! And all to keep us out of and not in the British Empire. Of course Britain is pleased, but it was not her proposition. She took what she could get and looked amiable accordingly.

With Australia it is perhaps slightly different. She must be prepared first and last to defend herself. She is too far away for immediate concerted action on the part of the whole imperial fleet. Consequently she must be a sort of outlying imperial centre. But it is not so with Canada. An independent Canadian fleet is a "foolishness."

THE FREEMAN'S JOURNAL

The Catholic Register.

The Dublin Freeman's Journal will do well to confine itself to subjects about which it knows something. It's recent description of Western Canada stamps the writer thereof as belonging to a species which has preserved a discreet silence ever since the days of the Prophet Baalam. This movement to keep the Irish at home must be in desperate straits when it has recourse to outrageous libels upon the magnificent provinces of Western Canada. It may help to keep the serfs and slaves of landlordism eking out a bare existence on a few poor acres for which they pay exorbitant rents, but the message has gone forth to the poor of Ireland that the land of opportunity stretches wide its arms to the down-trodden and oppressed of every nation. This year the total products of Alberta in wheat, cattle, sheep, potatoes and cereals of various kinds amount to over $200,000. There is plenty of coal for fuel and the two thriving cities of Calgary and Edmonton show higher bank clearings than Dublin and Cork combined. ... Ireland has on an average 36 clear days out of a whole year, Alberta has over 300. Winter in Alberta is shorter by a month than it is in Germany and cattle graze out in the fields the whole winter through. There are thousands of Irishmen in Alberta and some of them go back occasionally to Ireland. They bring their automobiles with them and as they spin up and down the Green Isle they wonder what in heaven keeps so many splendid young men working for absentee landlords when the best land in the greatest country in the world can be had almost for a song.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Mass will be celebrated on the transatlantic steamships of the Canadian Pacific line hereafter.

To us it looks as if that commercial traveller got more than was coming to him when he was gaoled without option of a fine at Port Hope recently.

Someone has said that there is always a purchasable element in every community. Does that excuse the purchaser? What must be said of him?

The provincial police, game and fish wardens, license inspectors, etc., will future be an organized and co-related body directly under the attorney-general and not a haphazard, undirected lot of men scattered throughout the country. It will mean a great deal for Ontario.

The increase in the supply of gold, the basis of our medium of exchange, is generally regarded as a prime cause of increase in prices. Where gold is scarce one dollar buys as much as two where it is plentiful. It is not necessary to look for further reasons. To the man who has no more gold when it is scarce than when it is plentiful, the change in prices is serious.

Calais, the city of historical memories, is in danger of losing its prosperity on account of the United States' tariff, which is forcing the lace workers to emigrate to the latter country. The Government is endeavouring to remedy matters, but so far without success.—Trade Review.

According to the Globe it should have been the United States that suffered.

It is announced that ten thousand acres of rich bituminous coal, which will coke to the extent of 80 p.c., have been struck in the Peace River district, close to the border of British Columbia, by a syndicate, which includes capitalists of Eastern Canada. This is the latest big discovery in the resources of the Peace River country, and means much to the discoverer and to the whole western country, as a new source of supply.—Trade Review.

C.P.R. SURVEYORS ARE AT LINDSAY

Completing the Survey for Grain Route—New Bridge to be Built There

The party of C.P.R. surveyors who have been surveying on the route of the C.P.R. grain line from Georgian Bay to the main line, are in town.

They have been working in Manvers township near Bethany. The present intention of the C.P.R. is that the line shall cross the G.T.R. at Reaboro and run in an easterly direction near Bethany and Brunswick and tap the main line at Kendrey Station, about five miles from Peterborough. The surveyors are in Lindsay for the purpose of completing the survey from this town to Reaboro. The route has been surveyed from Coldwater here, and the survey filed at the local registry office. The staff will now make a final survey through the town. The line will pass near Carew's mill and will cross the river by a high level bridge which will cost in the neighborhood of $250,000. The line will then parallel the G.T.R. Lindsay and Omemee line as far as Reaboro.—Lindsay Post.

They are called "CATSPAW" Rubber Heels because they don't slip; the Canvas Plug prevents slipping. They are a great comfort and offer a sense of security to the step not found with any other Rubber Heel. Take none but "CATSPAW." All dealers.

OSHAWA AND WHITBY GIVEN THE "GO-BY"

Toronto, Oct. 12.—W. H. Moore, manager of the radial system here, stated to the Telegram that the special survey made by the engineers of the C.N.R., at the request of deputations from Oshawa and Whitby, had disclosed nothing favorable to the interests of either or both towns.

"We are about to inform these towns that the original survey, which runs the Toronto-Ottawa line some miles above Whitby and Oshawa and other places will have to be followed," said Mr. Moore to-day.

NO RADIAL EXTENSION.

"Have you, as a morning newspaper intimates, bought the Oshawa Electric Railway?"

"No, nor do we intend to."

"Are you planning radial extensions east towards Whitby?"

"We are not. There'll be mighty little radial building so long as the law limiting a franchise to 25 years remains in force."

Speaking of a radial entrance to Toronto, Mr. Moore stated emphatically that the company was making a fight for it, and did not really want it.

Makes the Glassware Fairly Sparkle

Mirrors and glassware are hard to clean with ordinary soap. The oily matter often leaves streaks and spots that are hard to remove.

But with Taylor's Borax Soap the result is wonderful. The surface is left without a single streak—it glitters and sparkles as though it were diamond.

And your work is only half as hard. For this soap reduces rubbing to a minimum—it works almost like magic.

Taylor's Soap

Borax is the most powerful cleanser in the world. It does wonders that are almost unbelievable until you once see the results for yourself. When you spend an hour cleasing the bath room, the tub, the wash bowl and the mirrors, you have wasted just half an hour. You would have done less than half the rubbing and finished in half the time with Taylor's Borax Soap.

For this soap does more than any other soap you have ever known. It loosens every bit of dirt instantly, it destroys every possible germ and leaves everything both clean and sweet. Hard water often hardens the hands—it leaves them red and rough. But this delightful borax soap softens the water and so softens the hands—it leaves them whiter and daintier than ever before.

We use only the finest of cocoanut oil in this soap. We go more than 12,000 miles to the isle of Ceylon just to be sure this oil is pure and fresh. Then we boil it doubly long and run thousands of gallons of pure water through it to remove every impurity. It is the cleanest and purest of soaps.

It requires twenty-one days to make a single cake. The labor of more than 200 persons is needed.

Yet this soap costs no more than the ordinary. We make millions and millions of cakes every year and are thus able to buy at the lowest of prices.

OMEMEE GETS PROMISE OF AN UP-TO-DATE STATION

Lindsay, Oct. 14.—Omemee has succeeded in securing a suitable station in the centre of the village, pending the time when a new one will be built.

A deputation were before the railway commissioners in Toronto yesterday and secured the promise of the Grand Trunk Railway that the present platform on Sturgeon street, Omemee, used as a station, would have a roof placed on it, would be heated and lighted and that every train should stop there. Previously this was a mere platform exposed to the weather and only some trains stopped there.

THE DEPUTATION.

ABANDON OLD STATION.

The actual location of the G.T.R. station at Omemee is over a mile from the village. The residents of that village have been complaining against the hardship entailed on them and others journeying to Omemee by the station being so far away. That it was disadvantageous to the growth of the village was also claimed.

For some time the matter has been in dispute and the Railway Commission interviewed previously. W. R. Tiffin, superintendent of the northern division of the G.T.R. acceded to the above demand has returned thankful that the mission they were sent on was a success.

A PERMANENT STATION.

Mr. Tiffin stated that a permanent station would be built in Omemee, when the final survey of the G.T.P. new grain route from Midland was completed.

Mr. Tiffin and Mr. Cowan, solicitor for the G.T.R., represented the road before the commissioners.

HARVESTING WILD RICE

For several weeks the annual rice harvest of the Indians of the Hiawatha and Alderville reserves has been going on. Quite a number have been engaged in gathering in the winter's supply. Many have been camped on Sugar Island, while others are farther down the lake. The gathering of rice is one of the most interesting events in the affairs of the Indians of this district and in some respects is a sort of holiday. The collecting of the grain is practically concluded and the Indians are engaged parching and winnowing and "jumpin" the grain. Only a few of the people that visit the lake in the summer realize the interest there is attached to this work and the Indians are so accustomed to it that they do not appreciate it. The autumn weather is probably the most delightful of the whole season and yet there are few, if any, visitors.

LONDON APARTMENTS

Renting a Furnished Flat in the English Metropolis.

THE TRICKS OF THE AGENT.

At First Everything Is Pleasant, but After the Place Is Taken the Woes of the Tenant Begin With the Advent of the Inventory Man.

To the uninitiated American the rent of a furnished flat in London seems a very simple and remarkably inexpensive matter. Every one is extremely polite, and your path is made easy. But no sooner have you closed the door of your new quarters than you are beset by the bogy of "extras." While you are taking a contented glance at the new domicile, congratulating yourself on the bargain and thinking how much more a similar place would cost you in New York, your musings are interrupted by the arrival of the man with the inventory. His business is to make an inventory of every blessed thing your flat contains, from a four post bed to a kitchen spoon.

At first you are vastly amused over the listing of such apparently insignificant items as "a lincrusta Walton frieze," the number of tiles in the fireplace, the bolts on the windows, the locks on the doors, a description of the handles on the dressing chest and the number of screws therein, but when you have been dragged through every room, going over these—to us—absurd details, you plunge from rage to despair and finally collapse when your tormentor at last departs. For this entertainment you have paid from half a guinea (about $2.60) upward, according to the rent of your flat.

But the real power of the inventory is only felt when you take your departure. You may be morally certain that the only damage you have done has been to break one or two teacups, for which you are quite prepared to pay an extortionate sum without a murmur. You may be sure of this, but presently you will receive a bill all neatly written out and covering several pages of foolscap and entitled "Dilapidations."

You will find that in every room the walls have been "chipped," the enamel on the bathtub "slightly marred," a monogram on a napkin ring "scratched," several saucepans "damaged," a knife handle "bent," a number of plates "cracked," and so on. I am quoting from a list of "dilapidations" presented to friends of mine who had occupied a flat for two months, during which time, after strenuous cleaning efforts, they left the premises in much better condition than when they went in. The bill amounted to £1 18s. 9d., roughly about $9.08.

Here there is no such fact recognized as ordinary wear and tear on furniture.

For the lease, which is here called "agreement," you have to pay from 10 shillings up to 3 guineas and more, according to rent. Then the government stamp affixed thereto, without which the document is not legal, costs you from half a crown (62 cents) to a guinea or more, again according to rent.

You may have taken your flat by "the month," but when your agreement is sent you find out it is for every four weeks! You will probably phone the agent calling his attention to the error, and he will inform you it is correct that way.

In renting an unfurnished flat, the shortest term for which is three years, you discover that the electric light fixtures are not included in the rental. Protest unavailing, you buy them yourself and pay for their installation. You must rent also your own gas cooking stove. You fancy the fenders for the fireplaces must have been overlooked, but not so; you must buy them yourself! As you have been so accustomed to a continuous supply of hot water, it never occurred to you to inquire into the subject. You find you can obtain it only by keeping a continuous fire in your kitchen range.

As the penetrating, clammy gray horror of an English winter draws on you begin to appreciate what it means to be minus steam heat. Your only defense are the coal fires, romantic in story, but totally inadequate to defy this marrow reaching, damp cold of London. Bathroom and halls remain at arctic temperature, for the grate fires do not radiate beyond a few feet, so you may sit close and burn or retire to a corner and freeze.

After having learned through painful experience the futility of struggle against English ways and methods it is amusing to watch the explosive American, who in hotel office, at railway station and on steamships holds forth as to the various things he will not submit to. He is usually listened to with a certain exasperating deference at which the British underling is a past master. But nothing is changed, and he has to submit, and the sooner the lesson is learned the more comfortable he will be.

The impenetrable stolidity of the average Briton is not to be disturbed, and the longer one remains in this country the more definitely one learns that the English people have a pretty substantial idea of commercialism and that you are paying for the lemon.—London Cor. New York American.

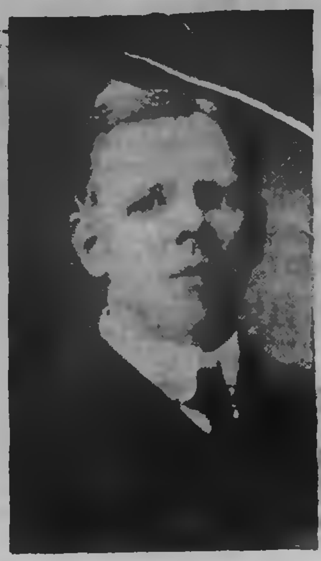
Why Stanfield's Make Underwear



UP to 20 years ago, most everyone considered that all Underwear—no matter how well cut and made—would shrink and harden.

In those days, the makers were working on the wrong idea. They were trying to find a way to finish Underwear so that it would not shrink, instead of trying to find a way to get the shrink out the wool before the yarn went to the knitting machines.

The late C. E. Stanfield—who knew wool as only a man can know it who studies it from the sheep's back to the wearer's back—gave his attention to the problem for years.

Living in Nova Scotia, he soon realized that woolen underwear, and the best of pure woolen underwear, was the only kind that would and could protect the Canadian against the rigorous Canadian Winters. He found that as underwear was then made, he could not make woolen underwear that would not shrink, mat and harden. He devoted himself to this problem and after many years of experimenting, he finally discovered a method by which he could take the shrink out of the wool before the garments were knitted.

This method, improved and perfected, has made possible the immense business of Stanfields Limited, with a larger output of their special classes of Underwear than any other factory in Canada.

The Stanfields make underwear today because Canadian people find Stanfield's Underwear the most comfortable, the most durable, and the warmest for its weight.

The Stanfields are making more underwear every year because the buying public demands more of it. Popularity is a good test of quality.

In 3 standard weights—Light (Red Label), Medium (Blue Label) and Heavy (Black Label) and 17 other weights and qualities to suit the needs and requirements of every man and woman.

The best dealers everywhere handle Stanfield's Underwear. Catalogue showing styles, and sample of fabric, sent free for your address. 1

CURFEW BELL ELIMINATED AT LINDSAY

Lindsay, Oct. 12.—The curfew bell tolls in Lindsay no longer at nine o'clock at night. The sound of the bell, which at one time was a warning to street urchins to be at home and off the streets, will not be heard here. The duty of ringing the bell has been cut off the list of those Caretaker Hoar has to perform and instead he rings the bell at a quarter to nine in the morning, which warns the school children that the time for resuming their duties is drawing nigh.

The Board of Education at one time paid the town hall caretaker $20 for ringing the quarter-to-nine bell. Then this was cut off and the bell was silent for a long time. The Town Council took the matter up and decided to add that duty to Mr. Hoar's, but without additional remuneration. However, as a sort of recompense, he will no longer be asked to ring the curfew bell at night.

The purpose of the curfew, when instituted hundreds of years ago, any student of English history well tell you, was to mark a time when all lights were to be put out. After the curfew rang it was a criminal act to keep a light burning. This was to prevent conclaves of the general public, at which meetings sedition and rebellion might be originated. The purpose of the curfew changed with the centuries, and its general use is, as stated previously, to warn young people that it is time to go home. It is an offence in many places for a minor to be on the streets without any particular business, after the curfew has rung.

ONE CHARGE WAS DISMISSED AND THE OTHER WITHDRAWN

R. H. Shepherd Acquitted on Perjury Charges at Preliminary Hearing—Magistrate Characterized Evidence as Too Broad and General.

Magistrate Dumble didn't think the perjury charges preferred against Shepherd were sufficiently substantiated by the evidence offered and dismissed them both at the preliminary hearing yesterday afternoon, characterising some of the evidence offered by the Crown as too general and broad to warrant him in sending the accused up for trial, and he dismissed the perjury charges laid against Shepherd by Messrs. J. G. M. Wilson and W. A. Brundrette.

The hearing of the evidence in the charge laid by Mr. Wilson was continued at the afternoon session, which opened at three o'clock.

George Beaton, jr., the first witness called, said he might have been at the White House on two or three occasions when Shepherd was there. He saw Shepherd there once he remembered of. He didn't see Mr. Wilson with him or Mr. Waddell. It was the only time he saw Shepherd before the election. Witness wrote Shepherd at Mr. Burnham's instance to send information to Mr. W. H. Moore in connection with the workers.

Herbert Kendrey, son of Mr. James Kendrey, was a worker at the last election. He testified briefly.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, the petitioner in the West Peterborough election trial. He said Mr. Waddell was the secretary of the Liberal-Conservative Association for West Peterborough and that Mr. Kendrey was his (Mr. Burnham's) agent at the last election. He had heard Shepherd was one of those retained to see if corrupt practices were being indulged in by the Liberals. He didn't know that any payments had been made to Shepherd and had no recollection of being told so by Mr. Peter Gardner. The remuneration in the employment of detectives, is not an election expense. He didn't expect Mr. Wilson would be actively engaged in the campaign, as they had been instructed at the C.G.E. Works not to have anything to do with politics. He acquiesced in Mr. Waddell and others hiring men to do purely detective work. Mr. Burnham didn't know at the time of the election that payments had been made to Mr. Shepherd, and had not heard of anything to the effect that Shephard had been bribing anybody to vote. That ended Mr. Burnham's testimony.

Mr. Wood.—"The position of the prosecutor is that Wilson, who heretofore has been an active worker in the Conservative party, as an employee of the C.G.E. had nothing to do with the campaign. Wilson said he was not in the campaign. The only thing he ever did was to go to Mr. Kendrey's office to introduce Shepherd to him. The evidence showed that no arrangement such as Shepherd stated had been made. Shepherd swore that certain things had taken place and Wilson and Brundrette denied it. The prosecution here had established beyond doubt that the man swore what was false. If this man has been guilty of corruptly perjuring himself, I want the case to go for trial. I can't conceive how the evidence of two witnesses should be entirely ignored and the man let off."

Mr. Gordon said Shepherd was entitled to have the charge dismissed.

The Magistrate said he was not dealing with the morality of the case or the differences of the two parties.

"All I have to do is to take evidence submitted to me and decide whether or not it is sufficient to commit Shepherd for trial."

He characterized the denials of Shepherd's statements under oath as too broad and general and dismissed the information. During the progress of the hearing Mr. Gordon said he was quite willing to believe that Mr. Wilson had taken no active part in the election.

The Brundrette charge was next taken up. The Magistrate wanted to know if it wasn't practically a repetition of the same thing.

Mr. Brundrette said the statements of Shepherd made under oath were absolutely false. There was something passed between Shepherd, Wilson and himself about the election. Shepherd brought the matter up and stated that he'd made up his mind to support the Conservative candidate. Shepherd said he hadn't been used fairly by the Liberal party, and that he wanted to work in the interests of the Conservative candidate. Witness said he told Shepherd he was taking no part whatever in the campaign, and that he could give him no information.

To Mr. Wood the witness said that the statement that he and Wilson and Kendrey had employed Shepherd to go into Mr. Stratton's committee rooms was absolutely false. No mention of a cheque for $200 was made to Shepherd.

"The statements which Shepherd made about me are all absolutely false.

"I did not canvass a man in West Peterborough at the last election."

He said his position was such that he couldn't take an active part in any elections, and he wanted to make it clear that he was not in any way actively interested in the election.

In view of the Magistrate's decision in the Wilson case, the County Crown Attorney announced that the Brundrette charge would be withdrawn.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time-keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

MR. W. G. McCLELLAN HONORED BY CITIZENS OF PICTON

The following from the Picton Gazette refers to a son of Mr. J. H. McClellan and to a brother of Mr. A. J. McClellan:

"Mr. W. G. McClellan manager of the Picton branch of the Metropolitan Bank for the past six years has been transferred to the Brockville agency. This was the surprising news that was confirmed on Thursday morning.

"The going away of Mr. McClellan will remove one of the best known and most popular bank managers that has ever been at the head of a town banking institution. Just how his removal effects Mr. McClellan is best expressed in his own remark to the Gazette reporter. 'Picton will always seem home to me.'

"Mr. McClellan has been a resident of Prince Edward seven years. Six years he has managed the local branch, coming here from Wellington, when the Metropolitan Bank agency here was just feeling its way. Under his regime the new bank building was built. The great growth of the Metropolitan Bank in Picton district is wholly due to the influence of a manager who has not only become generally popular, but who has instilled a feeling of confidence into the customers of the bank.

"Not alone in a commercial sense is Mr. McClellan liked. He has been actively identified with the many interests of the town. He has taken a most prominent part and held high office with the Masons. He has been closely associated with the recent upbuilding of the cheese industry of Prince Edward, and he has been active the past couple of years in an improvement of things generally, of the Agricultural Society, being a most efficient director. He was also president of the Board of Trade. In civic and social circles Mr. McClellan has been well liked, indeed.

It is anticipated that Mr. McClellan will leave town the middle of next week."

The citizens of Picton tendered Mr. McClellan a farewell banquet last night. A large number of the popular friends of Picton and vicinity were present at the function, which was a most successful one.

NEW THEATRICAL CIRCUIT IS REPORTED FROM CHATHAM

The Chatham News says a new theatre—not of the moving picture variety—is to be erected in that city. Capitalists are already looking for a site. The building will be modern in every particular, and will cost in the neighborhood of $100,000. The necessary capital has been pledged. The News says: A circle comprising the cities of Brantford, St. Thomas, London, Stratford, Guelph and Chatham would appeal to routing agencies or another circuit taking in the cities of Montreal, Kingston, Lindsay, Hamilton, Peterborough, St. Catharines, and then taking in the cities to the west, ending up with Chatham and then to Detroit.

A SONG DEAR TO IRISHMEN

It is not an exaggeration to say that fifty million persons are familiar with Ireland's national song, "The Wearing of the Green." Mr. Bernard Daly will sing the old song among a number of new ones in his new, romantic Irish play, "Sweet Innisfallen," and it will be sung by Mr. Daly with the pathos it requires to touch our emotions. Mr. Daly stands in the forefront of Irish singing comedians, and makes a strong feature of his sweet tenor voice. He will sing "Sweet Eyes of Irish Blue," "The Call of the Wand," "Sweet Innisfallen," "Hide and Seek," (sung and acted with the child Molly), and "The Sweet Rose of Killarney." Mr. Daly and company will appear at the Grand Opera House next Wednesday evening, Oct. 20th, for one night only, under auspices Division No. 1, Ancient Order Hibernians.

TO BORE FOR OIL AND GAS IN DUMMER

Havelock, Oct. 14.—The Tiffin Oil, Gas and Salt Syndicate is the title of a syndicate composed of local capitalists, who will drill for oil and gas in Belmont in the course of a few weeks.

Mr. Aleck Ross, of town, is the originator of the syndicate. For years he has known of certain properties in this vicinity that showed every evidence of being oil and gas bearing. Lately he secured options on about 1,500 acres and organized the syndicate to test and develop the prospect.

The syndicate consists of one hundred memberships of the value of $25 each, and enough memberships have already been subscribed in town to warrant operations being commenced at once. Mr. Wesley Davidson, who has been appointed agent and manager of the syndicate, is away now procuring a drilling outfit, and in the course of two or three weeks drilling will commence in Belmont, probably on Mr. Jas. Haughton's property lot 2, concession 1.

All the members of the syndicate are extremely optimistic regarding the prospects to "make good," and it is to be hoped that the tests will realize their expectations, as it would prove of inestimable benefit to themselves, to Havelock, and the surrounding district.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

The Younger Set

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS,
Author of "The Fighting Chance," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1907, BY ROBERT W. CHAMBERS.

"Not treachery, only temptation," observed Ruthven blandly. "I've talked it all over with Orchil and Mottly. I told Orchil what you persuaded me to do."

"Nothing important," said Ruthven.

"You—you"—

"Not at all; not at all!" protested Ruthven, languidly settling himself once more among the cushions. "And, by the way," he added, "there's a law—bylaw, something or other—that I understand may interest you"—he looked up at Neergard, who had sunk back in his chair—"about unpaid assessments."

Neergard now for the first time was looking directly at him.

"Unpaid assessments," repeated Ruthven. "It's a detail—a law—never enforced unless we—ah—find it convenient to rid ourselves of a member.

"Thought it just as well to mention it," said Ruthven blandly, "as they've seen fit to take advantage of the—ah—opportunity—under legal advice. You'll hear from the secretary, I fancy—Mottly, you know. Is there anything more, Neergard?"

He looked at Ruthven, scarcely seeing him. Finally he gathered his thick legs under to support him as he rose, stupidly, looking about for his hat.

Ruthven rang for a servant. When he came, Neergard followed him without a word, small eyes vacant, the moisture visible on the ridge of his nose, his red, blunt hands dangling as he walked. Behind him a lackey laughed.

* * * * * * *

In due time Neergard, who still spent his penny on a morning paper, read about the Orchil ball. There were three columns and several pictures. He read every item, every name, to the last imbecile period.

Then he rose wearily and started downtown to see what his lawyers could do toward reinstating him in a club that had expelled him—to find out if there remained the slightest trace of a chance in the matter. But even as he went he knew there could be none.

There was a new pressure which he was beginning to feel vaguely hostile to him in his business enterprises—hitches in the negotiations of loans, delays, perhaps accidental, but annoying; changes of policy in certain firms who no longer cared to consider acreage as investment, and a curiously veiled antagonism to him in a certain railroad, the reorganization of which he had dared once to aspire to.

And one day, sitting alone in his office, a clerk brought him a morning paper with one column marked in a big blue penciled oval.

It was only about Gerald Erroll and Gladys Orchil, who had run away and married because they happened to be in love, although their relatives had prepared other plans for their separate disposal. The column was a full one, the heading in big type—a good deal of pother about a boy and a girl, after all, particularly as it appeared that their respective families had determined to make the best of it.

It took Neergard all day to read that column. Then he went home with a mental lassitude that depressed him and left him drowsy in his great armchair before the grate—too drowsy and apathetic to examine the letters and documents laid out for him by his secretary, although one of them seemed to be important—something about alienation of affections, something about a yacht and Mrs. Ruthven, and a heavy suit to be brought unless other settlement was suggested as a balm to Mr. Ruthven.

To dress for dinner was an effort—a purely mechanical operation which was only partly successful, although his man aided him. But he was too tired to continue the effort, and at last it was his man alone who disembarrassed him of his heavy clothing and who laid him among the bedclothes, where he sank back, relaxed, breathing loudly in the dreadful depressed stupor of utter physical and neurotic prostration.

Chapter 27

EVEN before Neergard's illness Ruthven's domestic and financial affairs were in a villainous mess. Rid of Neergard, he had meant to deal him a crashing blow at the breakaway which would settle him forever and incidentally bring to a crisis his own status in regard to his wife.

Whether or not his wife was mentally competent he did not know. He did not know anything about her. But he meant to.

That she had been and probably now was under Selwyn's protection he believed. What she and Selwyn intended to do he did not know. But he wanted to know. He dared not ask Selwyn—dared not because he was horribly afraid of Selwyn—dared not yet make a legal issue of their relations, of her sequestration or of her probable continued infirmity because of his physical fear of the man.

But there was, or he thought that there had been, one way to begin the matter, because the matter must sooner or later be begun, and that was to pretend to assume Neergard responsible and on the strength of his wife's summer sojourn aboard the Niobrara turn on Neergard and demand a reckoning which he believed Selwyn would never hear of.

Ruthven was too deadly afraid of Selwyn to begin suit at that stage of the proceedings. All he could do was to start, through his attorneys, a search for his wife and meanwhile try to formulate some sort of definite plan in regard to Gladys Orchil.

This, in brief, was Ruthven's general scheme of campaign, and the entire affair had taken some sort of shape and was slowly beginning to move when Neergard's illness came as an absolute check, just as the first papers were about to be served on him.

There was nothing to do but wait until Neergard got well, because his attorneys simply scoffed at any suggestion of settlement out of court, and Ruthven didn't want a suit involving his wife's name while he and Selwyn were in the same hemisphere.

But he could still continue an unobtrusive search for the whereabouts of his wife, which he did. And the chances were that his attorneys would find her without great difficulty, because Selwyn had not the slightest suspicion that he was being followed.

* * * * * * *

In these days Selwyn's life was methodical and colorless in its routine to the verge of dreariness.

When he was not at the government proving grounds on Sandy Hook he remained in his room at Lansing's, doggedly forcing himself into the only alternate occupation sufficient to dull the sadness of his mind—the preparation of a history of British military organization in India and its possible application to present conditions in the Philippines.

He had given up going out—made no further pretense—and Boots let him alone.

Once a week he called at the Gerards', spending most of his time while there with the children. Sometimes he saw Nina and Eileen, usually just returned or about to depart for some function, and his visit, as a rule, ended with a cup of tea alone with Austin and a quiet cigar in the library.

* * * * * * *

The elopement of Gerald and Gladys made a splash in the social puddle.

Eileen, loyal, but sorrowfully amazed at her brother's exclusion of her in such a crisis, became slowly overwhelmed with the realization of her loneliness and took to the seclusion of her own room, feeling tearful and abandoned and very much like a very little girl whose heart was becoming far too full of all sorts of sorrows.

Nina misunderstood her, finding her lying on her bed, her pale face pillowed in her hair.

"Only horridly ordinary people will believe that Gerald wanted her money," said Nina, "as though an Erroll considered such matters at all or needed to. Boots is a dear. Do you know what he's done?"

"What?" asked Eileen listlessly, raising the back of her slender hand from her eyes to peer at Nina through the glimmer of tears.

"Well, he and Phil have moved out of Boots' house, and Boots has wired Gerald and Gladys that the house is ready for them until they can find a place of their own. Of course they'll both come here. In fact, their luggage is upstairs now. Boots takes the blue room and Phil his old quarters. But don't you think it is perfectly sweet of Boots? And isn't it good to have Philip back again?"

"Yes," said Eileen faintly.

Nina laid a cool, smooth hand across her forehead, pushing back the hair, a light caress sensitive as an unasked question.

But there was no response, and presently the elder woman rose and went out along the landing, and Eileen heard her laughingly greeting Boots, who had arrived posthaste on learning that Drina was indisposed.

"Don't be frightened. The little wretch carried tons of indigestible stuff to her room and sat up half the night eating it. Where's Philip?"

"I don't know. Here's a special delivery for him. I signed for it and brought it from the house. He'll be here from the Hook soon, I fancy."

Half an hour later Drina was asleep, holding fast to Boots' sleeve, and that young gentleman sat in a chair beside her discussing with her pretty mother the plans made for Gladys and Gerald on their expected arrival.

Eileen, pale and heavy lidded, looked in on her way to some afternoon affair, nodding unsmiling at Boots.

"Have you been rifling the pantry, too?" he whispered. "You lack your usual chromatic symphony."

"No. I'm just very tired. If I wasn't physically afraid of Drina I'd get you to run off with me—anywhere. What is that letter, Nina? For me?"

"It's for Phil. Boots brought it around. Leave it on the library table, dear, when you go down."

Eileen took the letter and turned away. A few moments later as she laid it on the library table her eyes involuntarily noted the superscription written in the long, angular, fashionable writing of a woman.

And slowly the inevitable question took shape within her.

How long she stood there she did not know, but the points of her gloved fingers were still resting on the table and her gaze was still concentrated on the envelope when she felt Selwyn's presence in the room, near, close, and looked up into his steady eyes—and knew he loved her.

And suddenly she broke down, for with his deep gaze in hers the overwrought specter had fled.

"What is it?" he made out to say, managing also to keep his hands off her where she sat, bowed and quivering by the table.

"N-nothing—a—a little crisis—over now—nearly over. It was that letter—other women writing you—and I—outlawed—tongue tied. Don't look at me; don't wait. I—I am going out."

He went to the window, stood a moment, came back to the table, took his letter and walked slowly again to the window.

After awhile he heard the rustle of her gown as she left the room, and a little later he straightened up, passed his hand across his tired eyes and, looking down at the letter in his hand, broke the seal.

It was from one of the nurses, Miss Casson, and shorter than usual:

"Mrs. Ruthven is physically in perfect health, but yesterday we noted a rather startling change in her mental condition. There were during the day intervals that seemed perfectly lucid. Once she spoke of Miss Bond as 'the other nurse,' as though she realized something of the conditions surrounding her. Once, too, she seemed astonished when I brought her a doll and asked me, 'Is there a child here, or is it for a charity bazaar?'

"Later I found her writing a letter at my desk. She left it unfinished when she went to drive, a mere scrap. I thought it best to inclose it, which I do herewith."

The inclosed he opened:

"Phil, dear, though I have been very ill, I know you are my own husband. All the rest was only a child's dream of terror."

And that was all, only this scrap, firmly written in the easy flowing hand he knew so well. He studied it for a moment or two, then resumed Miss Casson's letter:

"A man stopped our sleigh yesterday, asking if he was not speaking to Mrs. Ruthven. I was a trifle worried and replied that any communication for Mrs. Ruthven could be sent to me.

"That evening two men—gentlemen apparently—came to the house and asked for me. I went down to receive them. One was a Dr. Mallison; the other said his name was Thomas B. Hallam, but gave no business address.

"When I found that they had come without your knowledge and authority I refused to discuss Mrs. Ruthven's condition, and the one who said his name was Hallam spoke rather peremptorily and in a way that made me think he might be a lawyer.

"They got nothing out of me, and they left when I made it plain that I had nothing to tell them.

"I thought it best to let you know about this, though I personally cannot guess what it might mean."

Selwyn turned the page:

"One other matter worries Miss Bond and myself. The revolver you sent us at my request has disappeared. We are nearly sure Mrs. Ruthven has it—you know she once dressed it as a doll, calling it her army doll—but now we can't find it. She has hidden it somewhere—out of doors in the shrubbery, we think—and Miss Bond and I expect to secure it the next time she takes a fancy to have all her dolls out for a 'lawn party.'

"Dr. Wesson says there is no danger of her doing any harm with it, but wants us to secure it at the first opportunity."

He turned the last page. On the other side were merely the formula of leave taking and Miss Casson's signature.

For awhile he stood in the center of the room, head bent, narrowing eyes fixed; then he folded the letter, pocketed it and walked to the table where a directory lay.

He found the name, Hallam, very easily—Thomas B. Hallam, lawyer, junior in the firm of Spencer, Boyd & Hallam. They were attorneys for Jack Ruthven. He knew that.

Mallison he also found—Dr. James Mallison, who, it appeared, conducted some sort of private asylum on Long Island. What was Ruthven after?

PETERBORO TEAM FOR GAME WITH PARKDALE TO-MORROW

A Strong Line-up for Senior O. R. F. U. Game at Riverside Park—Dr. Wood and J. B. McArthur Will Probably be Officials

The rugby enthusiasts are keyed up to a high pitch in anticipation of the senior O.R.F.U. game to-morrow at Riverside Park between Parkdales of Toronto, and Peterborough. From the lineup of the locals it will be seen that they will have a formidable fourteen to do battle with the paddlers who will also be represented by the strong aggregation that won from T.A.A.C. in spectacular fashion. The officials of the game will probably be Dr. Wood and J. B. McArthur, both of Toronto.

The Peterborough team will be:

Back, Craig.
Left-half, Cahill.
Centre half, Quinlan.
Right half, Corkery.
Quarter, Campbell.
Scrimmage, left, Ecclestone.
Centre, Clarke.
Right, Thornton.
Wings, right inside, Dickson.

CHAMPIONSHIP FOOTBALL HAD TO BE POSTPONED

The football game for the championship of Ontario that was scheduled to take place in Havelock this afternoon between Havelock and Brussels was not played. The Brussels team would not come on a verbal guarantee of expenses, and it was too late to send a written guarantee. A large number of spectators from out of town places came in on the noon train to-day and were very much disappointed that the game had been called off.

Arrangements are being made to have the game played in Havelock at a later date.

RUGBY

Much has been said and written over the qualities of Ben Simpson and Jack Williams, with opinion divided as to which is the greatest player. After Saturday's game, those who saw the duel between the two agreed that Simpson had played the best game. Ben was forced to withstand continual hammering and punishment, Kilt and Stronach devoting a great deal of their time to deliberate attacks on Simpson, yet he stood up to it all the way and punted just as brilliantly as Williams. The latter came through the game without the semblance of a real hard tackle. All that the Ottawa captain has on Simpson is age, otherwise he is hardly the player that the old Peterborough boy is.—Hamilton Spectator.

Pete Campbell, the back, who captained Trinity College School last year, when they won the championship of the "little four," for the first time, is at quarter for the young soldiers, and is a great addition. He is a great little quarter, and the feature of his playing is his head work. He sees everything and never misses an opening of any kind. R.M.C. place considerable reliance on his judgment. Yes, if R.M.C. and Varsity II. meet in the final for the intermediate Intercollegiate championship, the game will be well worth going out of the way to see.—News.

Hugh Duffy is named as the probable manager of the Chicago White Sox. Duffy is part owner of the Providence Club, and has been a success as a minor league team handler.

New Westminster has refused to take on the Montreal team, N.L.U. champions, for Minto Cup games, as they thought it was too late.

Bruce Stewart of the Ottawa Stanley Cup team, was badly cut up by being run down by a horse last night at Ottawa. He was knocked unconscious with bad cuts on his head and face.

Percy Lesueur, the goalkeeper of the Ottawa team, will likely guard the nets for one of the Silver Country teams this winter.

Many would not be surprised to see Montreal down the Rough Riders tomorrow on the M.A.A.A. field, Hamilton Tigers will win from the Argos without doubt.

THE RING

That a big crowd of fight fans will witness the twenty round battle between Stanley Ketchel and Jack Johnson at Colma, Cal., next Saturday afternoon there is no doubt. Jimmy Coffroth, the fight promoter of California, who is staging the battle, announced in San Francisco last night that the advance sale of tickets so far amounted to $11,000, and that as the orders were coming in fast for seats he expected the gross receipts to amount to nearly $28,000. Both fighters are in excellent shape and will do no more boxing after Thursday afternoon until they begin fighting.

In a letter to a friend Sam Fitzpatrick, the ex-manager of Jack Johnson, says that Johnson is in the best condition of his entire career for his fight with Stanley Ketchel and that Jack will surely stop "Ketch" in less than fifteen rounds. "Johnson will weigh about 191 pounds," continues Fitzpatrick, "and is as fast as a kitten on his feet. Be sure and have a bet on him to stop Ketchel."

It is now practically settled that all details for the heavyweight championship fight between Jim Jeffries and Jack Johnson will be clinched in Chicago. Johnson declared in 'Frisco last night that he and his manager, George Little, would leave the coast next Sunday to fill an engagement at Kansas City the following week and that Little would meet Jeffries and Sam Berger in Chicago to complete all details for the big fight.

Events Were Keenly Contested—The Results

Lakefield, Oct. 15.—The annual sports day at the Grove Preparatory School Wednesday was a great success, though the inclement weather somewhat marred the day's enjoyment. TWO CRIMINAL CASES IN COUNTY COURT ON MONDAY

The final chapter of the Bollard tragedy will be opened at the Court House on Monday morning in the sitting of the County Court before Judge Huycke. The two Jolling boys will be put on trial for manslaughter in connection with Bollard's death.

The only other case on the docket is a criminal one, in which the accused is charged with a very serious offence. A civil case was to have been heard, but was settled out of court.

A CASE IN WHICH THE MAGISTRATE CAME NOT

John Jones, who was arrested for begging Wednesday morning, in Ashburnham, on complaint of a resident of Mark street, was discharged at the police court this morning, there being no evidence against him. A number of lady witnesses had been subpoenaed, and arrived at the police station at ten o'clock, but Magistrate Dumble did not appear. The witnesses went upstairs to the court room, and P.C. Meharry called up the Magistrate's office, and was told that he was not in. After a wait of twenty minutes, Rev. Mr Coon, who accompanied the witnesses, inquired as to what the cause of the delay was, and when P.C. Meharry called up the Magistrate's office the second time he was told His Worship was out of the city. After considerable more delay, City Clerk S. R. Armstrong was secured by Chief Roszel to act in the Magistrate's absence, and when two of the witnesses were called, both stated that they had never seen the prisoner before. Needless to say, the ladies were much provoked over the proceedings.

GIRL WHO WANDERED THE STREETS WAS DISCHARGED

Kate Vanorman, the young girl arrested last Sunday morning and was unable to give a satisfactory account of herself, was discharged by City Clerk S. R. Armstrong, who presided in the absence of Magistrate Dumble at the police court this morning. Considerable evidence was taken in connection with the case but the evidence of the defence and the statement of the accused's mother, that she would in the near future take her daughter away and reside elsewhere, found favor with the court.

P. C. Newhall told the circumstances in connection with the arrest. It was about 12.40 Sunday morning that he noticed the girl in company with a man walking south on George street. Three young men followed. On arriving at the Chinese restaurant the two and one of the young men entered the restaurant and went into a stall. He succeeded in securing the next one. Chicken was ordered and after the meal cigarettes were mentioned and the girl asked to have one. Her companion went out and asked the man on duty for cigarettes but on being unable to secure them, went out and purchased some in the restaurant next door. He rejoined the girl and the other man and shortly afterward all went out and turned up George street, and then out Hunter street. During the journey the young man who went into the restaurant with the couple left them. On arriving at a laneway west of Aylmer street on Hunter the girl and man stopped and it was then that they were arrested. The girl did not offer to give any explanation but tried to break away. She used bad language during the trip to the police station. P. C. Meagher arrested the man. The girl's past reputation was not good and he had frequently seen her in the company of men.

The companion of the girl was called to the witness box and he gave his name as Lawry Kelly. He stated that he was an occasional visitor at the Vanorman home. He was there Sunday. He met a friend named Sullivan on the street that day, and both went to the house where they remained until about twelve o'clock at night. Kate Vanorman and her mother were present. He wanted something to eat and suggested that they go to a restaurant. Finally Sullivan the girl and himself left the house and went to the Dominion Chinese cafe, where they had a meal, and left again. Sullivan parted from them and it was while he was lighting his pipe on Hunter street that the officers made the arrest.

To Chief Roszel—"I didn't ask the girl to have a cigarette or ask the Chinaman to kiss her while we were in the restaurant.

The mother of the girl stated that her daughter's conduct had improved since she came home from Toronto in July. She had not stayed out after ten o'clock at night while home. The greater part of the time she had been working at various places. She had disapproved of her daughter going out so late on Sunday night, but had never had to chastise her before.

The prisoner admitted using bad language but denied the statement of P. C. Newhall that she refused to give a reason for being out at the time she was.

The rest of the evidence was similar to that of Kelly.

MADE A COMPLETE DENIAL OF SHEPHERD'S STATEMENT

Although the perjury charge against R. H. Shepherd that was laid by Mr. W. A. Brundrette was withdrawn by the Crown yesterday in the Police Court, Mr. Brundrette was given the opportunity of declaring under oath that what Shepherd had said concerning Mr. Brundrette's alleged proposition about the election were not true. Mr. Brundrette swore he was in no way connected with any work pertaining to the campaign and that Shepherd's statements to the contrary were false in every respect.

Mr. Brundrette had been instructed by his employers not to have anything to do with the election and he wished to make the statement under oath to vindicate himself. He signed the deposition which was taken down by the Magistrate and given to him that he might show it to his employers.

ENNISMORE HOUSE BURNED TO THE GROUND ON MONDAY

A bad blaze occurred at the residence of Mr. P. E. Galvin, Ennismore, on Monday morning about a quarter to one o'clock, when the dwelling was completely destroyed. The fire started in the space between the dining-room ceiling and the floor of the bedroom above. It is thought, judging from where it originated, that it was due to mice having a nest there and nibbling matches.

Considerable property of the household was saved, but quite a lot of clothing and other material in the upper portion of the house was burned.

Mr. and Mrs. Galvin are parents of Rev. Father Galvin.

COMPLAINANT SAID HE WAS KICKED IN SCUFFLE

The case of Darcy Dunlop, who is charged with assaulting James Morrow on Wednesday evening, was enlarged until to-morrow morning at the request of the accused, who stated that he wished to bring a witness to court.

The evidence, as given by the complainant, was to the effect that he was in the Nixon hotel on the above mentioned evening. His brother went outside, where a stranger accosted him in a threatening manner. Dunlop said "That's not the right man." The stranger then clinched with him, and both fell on the pavement. It was then that Dunlop kicked him in the leg.

Joseph Ploufe said Dunlop pointed Jas. Morrow out to him adding that he had a grudge against him, and if he got a chance, to do him up. He went outside and met John Morrow, but Dunlop said "That's not the one." When James Morrow came out both started to fight, and afterwards fell down, but he could not say positively that Dunlop kicked Morrow.

James Morrow's evidence was similar to that of the previous witnesses, giving the details which led up to the fight. Dunlop ran and made a kick at his brother, but wasn't certain as to whether the intended kick was delivered or not.

Wm. J. MacDonald also saw Dunlop make a kick at Morrow.

Dunlop denied kicking Morrow or telling Ploufe to hit him if he got a chance.

THE JURY DECIDES THAT SIR FRED BORDEN WAS LIBELLED

Judge Drysdale Says Reasonable Grounds do Not Exist —Call on Miss Chalefour Did Not Prove She Had Been Enticed.

Kentville, N.S., Oct. 16.—"Guilty of libel on every count," was the verdict which Foreman Moffatt of the jury trying the criminal libel suit of the King v. Carruthers, delivered at 8 o'clock last night.

It took four and a quarter hours to get an agreement. The point longest discussed was the charge of keeping Miss Chalefour for immoral purposes at the Palace street address. The jury filed in at 7.30 for instructions as to whether the charge could be applied to other localities. The foreman was instructed that it could not.

Late yesterday afternoon, while the jury were out, Sir Frederick and J. J. Ritchie, counsel for Carruthers, met on the court house steps.

"How do you do, Sir Frederick," said Ritchie. "How do you do," was the reply. Descending a few steps, Sir Frederick turned and said, "Don't you ever speak to me again." Ritchie replied, "I would rather speak to a black man, anyway."

Yesterday morning and afternoon the court-room was crowded to excess. Justice Drysdale delivered a charge to the jury so uncompromising against the defence that even the most ardent advocates for Sir Frederick were surprised.

The libel in question was, on its face, one of the worst possible in reference to a public man.

Defendant had pleaded that the statements were true, and that he believed on reasonable grounds that they were true.

The judge said reasonable grounds did not exist, and he withdraw this from consideration by the jury.

The second ground of justification was that the matter was one of public interest. He had ruled that matters of long ago, having relation to the present position of a man in order to guide the electorate, should be discussed, if they were true.

The evidence was then reviewed as the legal situation appealed to him. Even if Borden called on Hester Chalefour at Montreal, it was doubtful if this was ground for the assumption that he had enticed her there. There was no evidence that he kept the girl at 882 Palace street, in Montreal, for immoral purposes.

In regard to Mrs. McPharland having been separated from her husband by Borden, the judge said there was no reasonable evidence to this effect.

Miss Archambault's evidence was then reviewed. He told the jury to consider if Sir Frederick was even seen at her house by Miss Archambault.

Judge Drysdale thought they would do well to discredit the evidence of Hester Chalefour. She had admitted herself a blackmailer, a liar, and an abandoned person. No stock should be taken in her statements.

In his address to the jury on behalf of defendant, Mr. Ritchie, saying that he had been told that the majority of the jurors were Liberals, asserted that he believed they would be true to their oath, even though the case involved the reputation of a member of the Federal Cabinet. Sir Frederick's remark Thursday, "You are a political lawyer," had been a direct insult to the jury.

The real question, the lawyer declared was, did Borden commit adultery? Miss Archambault, the one disinterested witness, had identified him from a photo, as having stayed all night. Why was he coming to see a woman of her confessed character? The conclusion was undisputable.

Hester Chalefour was an admitted perjurer. As a witness for the prosecution, she had lied to shield Borden, not to condemn him. The cage where the bird was kept was the house at Outrement, bought with Borden's money.

"What was the $2,000 paid for?" asked counsel. "Sir Frederick is not a chicken. He is no easy mark. There can be only one reason." If Mrs. Allen's allegations were untrue, why had he not proceeded against her?

Borden and Miss Chalefour had been at the same hotel in Boston last Friday, and both declared they had not seen each other. Borden had admitted that she had been in his office many times. No innocent man received such visits from abandoned women.

W. E. Roscoe, crown prosecutor, argued that the cases in regard to Borden and Carruthers differed. It made no difference if Sir Frederick drank wine at banquets. He had not offended against the laws of the land. These things were irrelevant.

"These," said Mr. Roscoe, "are not the facts of the case. The real issue you are to determine on the real charges and evidence. If Sir Frederick's private life were under consideration, the fullest investigation would be courted." The manner in which The Eye Openers were left with and distributed by Mr. Carruthers was described as evidence that the defendant knew he was doing wrong.

If the statement that Borden had another woman, whom he had separated from her husband, were proved to be true, then Carruthers should be acquitted; if not, then he should be convicted. The charge was infamous if untrue. Mr. Roscoe scouted the idea of a man of Sir Frederick's stature and prominence hiding behind boxes. He also accepted as true the denials in regard to Borden's relationship with Miss Chalefour in Montreal.

KILLS WIFE AND HIMSELF

Harry Smith Slays His Half-breed Wife in a Quarrel.

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 16.—Harry Smith, an Englishman, shot and killed his wife and himself and tried to kill his daughter in the home, corner of Blackie and Holbrook streets, New Westminster, yesterday.

Mrs. Smith, who is partly of Indian blood, was born in Nicomen Island, and married Smith two years ago. Their married life was marked with many quarrels. Smith was an old man-of-warsman, and had been watchman on the ship Ramona, sunk in the Fraser last year.

The sixteen-year-old daughter, hearing shouts, rushed into the room and found her mother dead and Smith dying. Smith raised himself from the floor and pointed the gun at the girl, who knocked it aside. Smith fell back dead.

The girl and her younger brother, aged 10, fled and informed the police. The wife was shot through the brain. The bullet entered Smith's head at the right ear. It appears Smith and his wife quarrelled in the exhibition grounds Thursday night and subsequently on the street. Smith left a note addressed to the Chief of Police, which said his wife had made life unbearable. An inquest will be held.

BLOOD PACT WAS SIGNED

Manila, Oct. 16.—Thirty-six leaders of the striking cigar-makers were arrested here yesterday charged with criminal conspiracy.

This action is the result of the unionized cigar-makers striking for higher wages after the Payne tariff bill went into effect. Several serious riots have taken place.

The complaint on which the leaders were arrested includes a recitation of an alleged blood pact that was signed by the strikers. This was an oath each was required to take stating that if they betrayed the cause their brothers had the right to kill them without responsibility to the authorities.

ROBINETTE GETS AFTER AGINCOURT

Toronto, Oct. 16.—In addition to his motion to secure a postponement of the trial of his client, Walter Blythe, for the murder of his wife, T. C. Robinette, K.C., is considering an application to the High Court for the committment for contempt of court of all citizens of Agincourt who spoke to the motion protesting against the delays in the execution of the prisoner.

At the opening of the Assizes next week Mr. Robinette will move for the postponement of the trial to a time when it will be possible for Blythe to secure a fair trial, which he declares will be impossible anywhere in Ontario for some time to come, owing to the wide publicity given to the meeting and its resultant resolution.

Notice of his intention was served yesterday on Attorney-General Foy and Geo. T. Blackstock, K.C., crown prosecutor.

Speaking to a reporter last night Mr. Blackstock said, "I am not aware of the facts and, therefore, cannot say what I shall do. If they are as you say then it goes without saying that any meeting that expresses views on how a criminal trial should end is very strange and reprehensible."

HE PREVENTED THEIR ESCAPE

Minot, N.D., Oct. 16.—"Lean" Smith, alias Carford, one of the fattest and "smoothest" crooks in the country, miscalculated the width of a hole in the jail here early after his pal had sawed his way to freedom, and wedged so tightly that he could neither go on nor retreat. He prevented the escape of seven other prisoners who had broken from their cells.

When eight men finally pulled Smith out of his predicament, they found his clothes had been torn off by the other prisoners in a frantic effort to remove him from the only avenue to liberty.

George Turner, accused forger sawed through the window bars and escaped. Three others followed him.

HELP FOR ATHABASCA

Owen Sound, Ont., Oct. 16.—Supt. Buchanan, who left for the scene of the mishap to the steamship Athabasca, grounded on the Flower Pot Island, in the Lake Huron-Georgian Bay Channel, yesterday morning telephoned that the steamer was six feet out of water forward, and with sixty feet of water at her stern, and she would have to be lightered. A big bowlder had penetrated the bottom, and the vessel was leaking badly. He asked that the Alberta be despatched at once, and she cleared at 2.30 with fifty freight handlers.

Mayor Harrison later receive a message from Parry Sound offering to send the Dominion Government steamer Simcoe. The message was forwarded to Supt. Oborne at Toronto, who, while expressing appreciation, said that in all probability the Alberta and the two tugs would do the work. However, the offer was forwarded to Supt. Buchanan at Tobermoray. The powerful tugs Traveler and Mongolia and a lighter of the Playfair Wrecking and Towing plant are also available.

Memphis, Tenn., Oct. 16.—Death and destruction were left in the wake of the storm which passed over the National cemetery of the Battlefield of Shiloh at Hamburg, Tenn., Thursday night, according to advices received from Acton, Tenn., yesterday. Fifteen people were killed and many more were seriously injured.

Later advices confirm the report that Denmark, in Madison County, Tenn., had been practically wiped from the map, fire following the passage of the storm, continuing the work of destruction. Yesterday the town was largely smouldering embers, but few buildings escaping the flames.

CHILDREN KIDNAPPED

Chicago, Oct. 16.—Two Italian children, identified from photographs last night as Tomasso and Grace Viviano, kidnapped from St. Louis Aug. 2 last, and sought since by the police of many cities, were found early yesterday on the north side of the city by Detective Stephen Parodi of the Chicago Avenue Police Station.

The children when found were sitting on a curbstone weeping. The girl, who is less than four years old, was sobbing bitterly, and Tomasso, her cousin, seven years old, was trying to comfort her.

Tomasso could tell nothing as to where he and Grace had been since they were taken from their home.

THE THIRD DEGREE WAS A FAILURE

East St. Louis, Ill., Oct. 16.—After he had been kept awake for ninety-four hours by the East St. Louis police Arthur Fowler was permitted to sleep for half an hour yesterday. At the end of the half hour detectives threw him to a sitting position and resumed the "third degree."

For four days the police have tried to wring from Fowler a confession that he is the burglar who killed Chief of Detectives Patrick F. Gill on September 5 last. He has confessed to three burglaries and twenty box-car robberies, but denies the killing.

"They are murdering me," said Fowler yesterday. "The nap they let me have was the worst torture. I would rather have been killed than awakened. My heart is weak and if this keeps up much longer I will die."

Fowler admits he has served two terms in the Joliet Penitentiary.

R. L. BORDEN'S SARCASTIC SUGGESTION AT HALIFAX

Conservative Chieftain Suggests That Liberals Capitalize the Pull on the Spending Departments of the Government and Pay Big Dividends.

Halifax, Oct. 16.—R. L. Borden, the Conservative leader, addressed a large party gathering in his own constituency last evening. He left for the West to-day.

Mr Borden's address was a vigorous assault on the Government for its reckless squandering of public money for partizan purposes; the systematic encouragement and protection of camp followers engaged in plundering the public treasury, the degradation of public life by lowering those high standards of public honor which prevail in the Mother Country, and the colossal blundering in the administration of great national undertakings.

The practice of denying or burking investigation in cases where it was abundantly evident that the public treasury had been unjustifiably invaded had been common and notorious. Mr. Borden recalled the Hayes-McAvity scandal. The Opposition's demands for an enquiry had been refused, the Minister of Finance declaring there never had been a fairer or straighter transaction. Mr. Borden continued:

"With the stamp of Mr. Fielding's emphatic approval upon this transaction, there is a great opportunity for persons having or pretending to have influence with Ministers presiding over great spending departments of the Government. Why should not a 'Liberal Political Influence Corporation' be formed in every province, capitalized according to the probable 'pull' of its promoters, and why should not every contractor or intending contractor be required to enter into an agreement with such corporation for payment thereto of such portion of the amount of his contract as might be considered just and reasonable, the corporation undertaking on its part to procure for the contractor every possible advantage and favor that could be secured by party influence? To guard against any injustice it might be provided that the rates and amount of plunder thus extorted by enterprising camp followers should be subject to the approval of the Governor-in-council, or some similar tribunal."

SPANISH PAPER BLAMES CRISIS ON THE GOVERNMENT

Madrid, Oct. 16.—The Cortes reopened yesterday despite some opposition among the members of both the Senate and Congress to a sitting at this time. The Heraldo yesterday declares that the present situation has caused the world to point the finger of shame at Spain, and exhorts the Liberals of all shades of opinion to rise "against a Government which treats as anarchists those who do not kneel before the clerical's spectre."

The Municipal Council had a stormy session yesterday, during which recent political events were discussed with such bitterness that the Republican and Socialist aldermen withdrew from the meeting. The Socialist member, Senor Iglesias, began a declaration of protest against the putting to death of Ferrer, and when the President of the Council tried to silence him, shouted: "I will continue until I am dragged out by the heels by guards." The sitting thereupon was suspended, but when it was resumed Senor Iglesias returned to the charge amid a tremendous uproar, and finally the Socialists filed out in a body, and were followed by the Republicans.

The official gazette publishes a decree restoring the old system, which permits a payment of money indemnity in lieu of military service. The Universo Catholic says that it is not surprised at the Ferrer manifestos, which it considers an indication that the anarchistic and Masonic forces are inspiring a rebellion against all idea of government and justice." The paper denounces certain Spanish newspapers, which, it says, are trying to provoke disorders by reprinting accounts of what has happened abroad.

The Imparcial yesterday says that the country is on the verge of a precipice, and holds Premier Maura responsible for the present situation. It adds: "The patience of the country has reached an end. The protestations abroad prove that there is a common patrimony of liberty and democracy."

The Liberal says: "Parliament must vindicate the desire of the people to arrest the movement of retrogression which is annihilating them."

The Government has issued a semi-official note reprobating the demonstrations abroad and expressing the conviction that Governments and the public everywhere will ultimately justify the Government of Spain, because, the note says, the time is approaching when all forces for order must stand together against international anarchy.

Strike In Rome Continues.

Rome, Oct. 16.—The general strike continued unabated by the direction of Ferrer sympathizers. Even the radical Republican and Socialist newspapers were unable to get out their edition. Military measures had been taken and nothing occurred more grave than the smashing of a few shop windows and the breaking of several lamp posts.

GAS EXPLOSION WRECKS CEILING

Toronto, Oct. 16.—A gas explosion which resulted in no injury to the occupants of the house occurred at the home of John Denstone, 18 Davenport road, Thursday night shortly after 7 o'clock.

The family had just moved into the house and Mr. Denstone was cutting down the plumbing bill by putting in his gas fixtures himself when the explosion occurred.

He had removed the plug from the end of the pipe that projects down through the ceiling of the dining room and was about to screw on the fixture when the escaping gas was ignited by a coal oil lamp which stood on the table and the explosion followed.

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 16.—The launch Sarah L., five days out of Walker, Minn., is believed to have gone down with all on board on Larh lake, in a three days' storm which swept the lake Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. A Government boat has been sent out to look for the wreckage or dead bodies.

The Sarah L. left Walker Sunday morning heavily laden with supplies, and was last seen at noon Sunday. It was then laboring against the rising winds in the narrows, and out of its course. FREEDOM

The execution of Prof. Ferrer, of Barcelona, on the charge of inciting to riot, has got Europe aflame. It seems that the general opinion is that he is a victim to the determination of the ruling powers to preserve their rule.

Kings used to rule by what they claimed was "divine right." They were the direct instruments of God, they said. It was worse than heresy to dispute it, they declared. The Bible established it, it was pointed out, and therefore it was true, and being true, must be acknowledged and obeyed. It took a thousand years to knock this superstition in the head, but it went under at last in most countries. Dahomey has such a king, but he is probably the last of the line. Power and privilege have sought absolute rule over men from the beginning of time, on various pretexts. Sometimes it is kingship, sometimes religion, sometimes money, sometimes a spirit of ruthless monopoly, as in the case of great trusts. Against oppression in these various forms men have struggled for centuries through revolution and gradual development to a certain degree of freedom. This right to say what the laws governing men shall be, and that they themselves shall not be upon any pretext at the beck and call of any man is LIBERTY. Liberty does not mean license. It means freedom of conduct, as allowed by government. If the government has a keen appreciation of morals, the liberty will be within narrower limits, perhaps, than otherwise, but within those limits men will be free. This is the well-understood meaning of liberty. It is opposed to that form of government which decrees that within no limits, however narrow, shall men be free. This is the difference. There is no such thing even as "proper freedom" where "divine right" rules. Everything must yield to that. To use the word "freedom" under such conditions is a blind. To be free in the full sense may be to be too free. But it is better to be "free" within certain limits than not free at all. It is to this stage that mankind is arriving, and its power is being made known. Even the horror and fear of "divine right" no longer terrifies.

The "sense" of mankind forces it to to believe that God will be fair with man; that the heavenly Father will appreciate his earnest efforts and serious intentions, even if men do not, for God is all-great, all-wise. From Him alone can be expected perfect justice. Men, therefore, leave their case in His hands. But their earthly conduct is in their own hands. This they believe. At least the ruling portion be the best they can achieve they believe God will welcome them on the last day. Reason forbids any other conclusion.

This use of reason is a form of private judgment. Private judgment is the basis of all individual action. It must be, for even if a man decide to give it up and relinquish that right to someone else, it is still an act of private judgment that, first of all, impels him to do so. Therefore, private judgment is the basis of opinion. It must be free to form as it pleases, else it is not "private judgment" in the true sense. The basis of all opinion, then, we believe we are correct in saying, is "free private judgment." When that is recognized the various forms it ultimately resolves itself into in religion, politics, etc., are the legitimate outcomes of that free state but, it is hardly necessary to say, the free state is the basis of the liberty of opinion. The struggle of mankind has always been in this direction, and never more so than in these latter days.

LESSONS FOR LIBERALS

(The Globe.)

Liberals everywhere must recognize that the world is entering on a new era. They have had their part in its progress, but they must not make the mistake of supposing the summit has been reached and that no further progress is desirable or possible. Each age develops new problems, new evils calling for adequate remedies. The struggles of the past were to widen the area of liberty, and it is the philosophy of many who have a right to call themselves Liberals that liberty having been achieved each individual may be left to work out his own social salvation. It has been found, however, that society cannot be left to adjust itself in this way. There was an international struggle in the ranks of English Liberals in the latter half of the last century, when it was proposed to regulate work in coal mines by forbidding the employment of women and mere children. One section of opinion held that liberty of contract could not be interfered with. The other espoused the cause of the oppressed women and children. It was absurd to talk of such weaklings possessing liberty of contract. The country agreed with the latter school of thought and the legislation which prevented a woman or child being converted into a beast of burden, and a very debased beast of burden at that, was passed and put into operation. It was a turning point. Progress along the line has not been rapid, but from that day to this it has been recognized that Governments not only can, but must, recognize that there are elements of the population who are too weak to protect their own interests, and that these must be protected and raised from their debasement by the joint action of the community.

This is what The Spectator calls socialism. If it is, it is a socialism that the Liberal party should be courageous enough and worthy enough to incorporate in its platform. A political party should have for its field the interests of the whole people, but it would be useless to shut our eyes to the fact that there are sections of the population, numerically small, who are quite able not only to defend their legitimate rights and privileges, but also to appropriate a few of those belonging to their neighbors. In Britain it is the Dukes; on this side of the Atlantic it is the corporations.

The corporations are as necessary in the social organizations as any other element in it, and those who belong to them are possibly no greedier or more selfish than average humanity, but experience shows that they have often less conscience than average humanity, and a great deal more power. They have access to the private ear of the rulers where the masses have little or none. They are better informed, more alert, and are on the watch-towers every day in the year. The true role for a Liberal party is to act as the eyes and ears of the unorganized masses of the people, and to be ready to undertake their cause before they recognize what threatens them or has befallen them.

The struggle proceeding in Britain should be of supreme interest to every Liberal. Conditions in the two lands differ widely, but though forms differ, results and tendencies are sufficiently identical to make it possible for Liberals to learn many lessons from the splendid warfare being carried on by their British brethren. Liberals can never rest on their oars. The interests of the multitude are the field for their energies, and if they are to be true sentinels they cannot afford to sleep at their posts.

That the above article is an epoch-making one few will deny. True, Socialism is, we think, to be correctly described as State Socialism that is to say that form of socialism which demands that the state regulate human life and human activity in every form. What the Globe says appeals to us, but it is not socialism, which is merely another form of tyranny, enabling the moneyed men to rule the masses the more easily. His idea of socialism reads like Protection. Is it prepared to adopt Socialism in its correct sense and application?

Russia and China have advanced a stage in a democratic way. Constitutional government has begun. Even the Sultan of Turkey is no longer absolute. Men's opinions are becoming the court of last resort throughout the world. It is impossible to take from the People all hand in the government of the people. In every department of life it is gradually coming to it that men may have opinions of their own forming, which will rule them in the aggregate, for under no other system can men be free and happy. As men are responsible for what they do it is but reasonable that they should have the complete control of it.

FISH THAT WALK.

Climbing Perch Travel Over Land From Water to Water.

It may seem absurd to speak of fishes as walking. The flying fish is well known, but its flight looks much like swimming in the air. We naturally think of fishes as living always in water, as being incapable, in fact, of living anywhere else. But nature maintains no hard and fast lines of distinction between animal life which belongs to the land and that which belongs to the water. If we can believe the accounts of naturalists, there are fishes that traverse dry land.

It is reported that Dr. Francis Day of India has collected data of several instances of the migration of fishes by land from one piece of water to another.

A party of English officers were upon one occasion encamped in a certain part of India when their attention was attracted by a rustling sound in the grass and leaves. Investigation showed it to be caused by myriads of little fishes that were making for one direction and were passing slowly on. There were hundreds of them moving by using their side and small fins as feet, now upright, now falling down, squirming, bending, rolling over, regaining their finny feet and again pressing on.

These fishes were the famous climbing perch, and they were passing over the country to avoid a drought. When the stream in which they have been spending the season dries up they scale the banks and, directed by some marvelous instinct, crawl to another.—Pearson's Weekly.

A HOPEFUL POET.

Failure to Recognize His Genius Didn't Dampen His Ardor.

Paddy Quinn, a type of bohemian found only between the covers of a cheap novel, was sentenced by Justice Samuel C. Hyde, congressional representative for Washington during territorial days, to serve ten days on the rock pile after confessing that he had worked only seventy-five minutes during his stay of two months in Spokane. Asked by the court to explain how he earned a living, the prisoner said:

"I am a poet, but there is no use explaining to you that which would be unintelligible to your mind. I will recite some of my poetry instead. I will read a few stanzas from my masterpiece."

Before Quinn could give voice to the second line of his latest work the court had imposed sentence and the sweet singer was on the way to the city jail, where his tattered garments, oxford shoes and flesh colored hose were exchanged for overalls, jumper and hobnailed brogans. His long black hair and flowing beard were also trimmed for hygenic purposes, and, armed with a six pound hammer, he started for the rock pile, mumbling as he left the station:

"The muse got an awful jolt that time at the hands of an unsympathetic judge; but, then, there's hope. Recognition will come some time. It must come. Officer, please see that Pegasus is properly cared for until I return!"

The Lunatic's Idea of It.

"I was going through one of the wards the other day," said the superintendent of a lunatic asylum, "when one of the patients—incurably insane, I believe—walked up to me to announce that he wanted to be discharged.

"'Why?' I asked.

"'Because I've been here three years, and that's long enough,' he replied. 'And I want to be discharged today, too,' he added.

"I looked at him steadily for several seconds and then said:

"'My dear fellow, do you realise that I have been here seventeen years and have not been discharged yet?'

"The question appeared to puzzle the man for an instant. Then he snapped at me:

"'Well, you ought to have been discharged long ago.'"—New York Globe.

Corset Ancient Armor.

A French historian of women's dress states that the corset was worn by the ancient Egyptians. This assertion is borne out by the figures carved on the tombs of women, who are invariably represented as wearing a garment strongly resembling the modern corset. There does not appear to be any representation extant of Cleopatra VI., the beloved of Antony, but in one of the temples there is a figure of her predecessor, Cleopatra II., in which the sculptor has endowed her with a corset cut on the lines of those worn today. Whalebone was probably unknown to the Egyptians, but a nation capable of constructing pyramids without steam cranes would probably find no difficulty in making stays without busks.—London Chronicle.

His Favorite Song.

There is a young optician in Denver who sings very well, says the Post of that city. The other night he was making a call on a couple of sisters up on Corona street when he was asked to sing.

"What shall it be?" he asked as he went to the piano.

"Your favorite song," said one of the girls.

"All right," he replied, and then the optician sat down and sang "The Night Hath a Thousand Eyes."

Shelters Two Families.

Toronto, Oct. 16.—Two women standing on the corner of Belmont and Yonge streets about 12 o'clock at night, one with five children, the other with one, all strangers in the city, and with no place to go, was the unhappy situation that Motorman Garlick, of one of the Yonge street cars, discovered on Wednesday night.

Mrs. Agnes E. Chaplain with five children, and Mrs. Wray with one child, arrived from Belleville that evening at ten o'clock. Their husbands had come to the city a short time before, and Mrs. Chaplain had received a postcard saying that her husband, Charles Chaplain, a plumber, had obtained work, and asking her to come to Toronto and bring the children. When she arrived at the Union Station there was no one to meet them.

The motorman on the street car on which they had gone up saw them standing at the corner when he returned. Finding their position, he told them to wait, as he was just putting in his car. He returned, and took the whole party to his own home at 14 Belmont street, where he lives with his wife and nine children. They were sheltered for the night, and next day, by inquiring at the police office, the City Relief Office and the Salvation Army Men's Lodging House on Wilton avenue, Mrs. Chaplain found that her husband had been there the night before, but they did not know where he had gone.

The hospitality of Motorman Garlick and his wife is still being extended to the unfortunate party until the two husbands are found.

Short Sentenced for Theft.

Toronto, Oct. 16.—For the theft of about $800 worth of jewelry from John Martin of Cobalt George Daley was sent to jail for twenty days by Magistrate Denison yesterday. The theft took place about a week ago in the Palmer House, where Martin had gone to sleep in a shoe-shine chair. Daley admitted taking the jewelry from the complainant, taking a diamond ring off his finger, a nugget pin from his necktie and a gold watch and chain from his pocket. His plea was that he was drunk at the time.

Lords Incline to Peace.

London, Oct. 16.—The House of Lords Thursday night gave a favorable reception to and unanimously passed the second reading of the Development and Roads Improvement Bill, which provides for the utilization of the funds obtained by taxing motors, etc., for the development of the agricultural districts and the building and improvement of roads. This, though a separate bill, is really an integral part of the budget scheme.

PROPRIETOR OF CAVANAGH HOUSE CONVICTED AND FINED

Magistrate Dumble Imposed a Fine of $200, it Being the Third Conviction—The Proceedings at Police Court

Timothy Cavanagh, proprietor of the Cavanagh House, was this morning fined $200 by Magistrate Dumble for unlawfully selling liquor on the night of Saturday, September 25th. It was the third conviction. The charge was laid by Inspector Stewart and the substance of the evidence given at the trial last Saturday was to the effect that William Dickson was furnished with a 25c. flask of whiskey by the proprietor between the hours of 7 and 8 o'clock, Saturday, September 25th. Another witness named Brotherson, also testified that the liquor had been purchased. The proprietor denied the charge and the case was enlarged at the request of Mr. James Haverson, K.C., counsel for the accused, as one of the witnesses for the defence was sick in bed.

This morning the case was proceeded with. Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., acting as prosecutor, and Mr. Haverson in the interests of the defendant.

JOHN FARISH.

John Farish, called, said he lived in Toronto, but was at the Cavanagh House on Saturday, September 25th, from ten o'clock in the morning till nine at night. He was engaged in the office handing out the parcels to customers, and was not out of this office during the time between seven and eight o'clock in the evening. Mr. Cavanagh went to supper at seven o'clock, after the bar had been closed, and he did not go through the door, as stated by the witness, Dickson.

To Mr. Moore witness said he was a machinist by trade, and had been a detective in Peterborough during the West Peterborough election. He slept at the Oxford hotel, and secured his meals at Cavanagh's. He was working around the hotel nearly all day on Saturday, Sept. 15. Cavanagh was not in the office between seven and eight, and he was not out of it on any occasion. Didn't hear anybody ask for liquor. Jim Cavanagh locked up the bar, but his father was there at the time. Could have heard Cavanagh speaking while he was in the sitting room, but did not, except to a man named Trotter, who was talking about cattle.

Mr. Moore, Mr. Haverson and Magistrate Dumble, on the request of Mr. Haverson, went to the Cavanagh House and took the evidence of Mr. James Cavanagh. It was to the effect that he had the keys of the barroom on the night of the alleged sale of liquor.

On resuming proceedings at the court Mr. Haverson began his argument, basing it on the discrepancies existing between the story as told by Dickson and that of Brotherson; and his contention was that the prosecution had not, by reasonably good evidence shown to the Magistrate that liquor was sold on the night of September 25th.

MAGISTRATE DUMBLE.

His Worship said that it was quite evident that Dickson went there as a detective, although Brotherson might not have been acquainted with this fact. Both swore they went to the hotel after James Cavanagh was out of the bar. Brotherson said Dickson went up to Cavanagh and spoke to him, but didn't hear what he said. Cavanagh said "Wait till the crowd goes." Brotherson didn't say what Dickson said to Cavanagh, and both don't pretend to give the same statements as to what occurred. One witness said one man was there, and that must have been Farish, but Cavanagh wouldn't pay any attention to him. Dickson intimated that Cavanagh went through the little door into the bar and Brotherson says he came out of that door with a bottle of whiskey. Brotherson didn't say there was an offer of a bottle in the first place, but states that Dickson paid 25c. for a flask. This was taken away and given to Inspector Stewart, who must have known that Dickson went to the hotel to catch Cavanagh. Dickson says he tasted the whiskey. If Stewart had brought the bottle here I would have paid more attention to this part of the affair. The main thing is; "Did Cavanagh give liquor to the man that night. I have no doubt but that he did and have come to the conclusion that that part of the story is true. The evidence of Farish amounts to nothing. He was there one time and not another. I am sorry and I wish the evidence would allow me to come to some other conclusion, but I have no doubt that they got whiskey and paid for it and must therefore find the defendant guilty."

Mr. Moore asked that as the Magistrate had made the conviction, the defendant admit former charges.

Mr. Haverson—No, I won't admit other convictions.

Mr. S. R. Armstrong, Clerk of the Court, testified that the defendant had been convicted on the 3rd of April 1909, and on December 31st, 1907, for unlawfully disposing of liquor.

The by-law governing a third conviction sets forth that a fine of not less than $200 and not more than $300, may be imposed and in default of payment, five months in jail.

Hanlan Howard of Hiawatha Enters Herald's Big Event

Hanlan Howard, of Hiawatha, has entered the Hamilton Herald road race, to be run on Thanksgiving day. Yesterday's Herald says:—

"Hanlan Howard, an Indian runner, of Hiawatha, forwarded his entry this morning. Howard is being coached by Fred Simpson, who ran second in the Herald race last year and the year before, but who has turned professional. Simpson claims that Howard is a better runner than he ever was, and thinks that he will carry away one of the Herald cups. Simpson has competed here often enough to know what is expected of a runner, and would not go to the trouble of bringing Howard here if he did not show some class.

RUNNING

WILL RUN HERE.

"Teddy" Heard the Fenelon Falls youthful runner, will enter the Peterborough Examiner junior road race on Thanksgiving Day. Heard has been training for several weeks and will be in good shape to enter the race. He has not been long at the running game but has won a couple of races in handy style and should cut a figure in the Peterborough event. This is the first time the Peterborough race has been opened to runners from outside Peterborough County and Victoria County is going to make an effort to cop one of the events.—Lindsay Warder.

HONORED BY CLASS AND CHOIR

Presentation and Address to Mrs. Solomon at Springville Manse

At the Springville manse last night a very pleasant gathering took place, the feature of which was a presentation and address to Mrs. J. Solomon by her Sunday school class and the choir of the church, in honor of her marriage a few weeks ago. The choir presented her with a handsome mantel clock, and the class gave her a dozen silver spoons.

The address from the class was as follows:—

We, the members of your Sabbath school class, beg to take this opportunity of expressing to you our gratitude for the manner in which you have conducted yourself as our teacher, and for the helpful way in which you have always explained to us the lessons. We ask you to accept this little present as a token of our esteem on this, the occasion of your marriage, and we sincerely hope that you may long be spared to contribute your labor of love as our teacher.

Signed on behalf of the class,
KATHLEEN CATHCART.
PEARL BOWLES.

The choir's address was:—

We, the members of the Springville Presbyterian church choir, ask your acceptance of this clock as a token of our esteem. You have always been a willing helper in our work. We wish you happiness in your new sphere, and your continuance as a member of our choir.

Signed on behalf of the choir,
JENNIE CATHCART,

EVA M. PRESTON.

After the presentations Mr. Solomon made a suitable reply on behalf of his wife, and thanked their many friends for their kindness.

Short addresses were also delivered by Mr. Fred Wilson and Mr. G. Patty Jenkins, of Hamilton.

After a very pleasant evening those assembled sang "For they are jolly good fellows," and "Blest be the tie that binds."

ON NOTHING A YEAR.

A Protest Against Smart Dressing on Small Expenditure.

Did it never occur to you that you would like to do some violence to these women who write to the magazines and tell how to look "natty and well dressed on $69.71 a year?"

They give you such an uncomfortable, guilty feeling when you begin to cast up accounts to find out how much your own clothes have cost.

These frugal dames, mind you, always insist that they are extremely "natty and well dressed." Then they put down the cost of one suit, four waists, a frock and an umbrella.

Shoes and gloves are supposed evidently to last forever.

One is to make her own neckwear or go without and get enough handkerchiefs from her Christmas box to last the year.

Veils and ruchings simply aren't figured in, and a new hand bag or an occasional pair of rubbers or a couple of wash belts are extravagances which any careful person ought to avoid.

Then a shirt waist is to cost $1. That means the material, but beside that there are hours of work to embroider it.

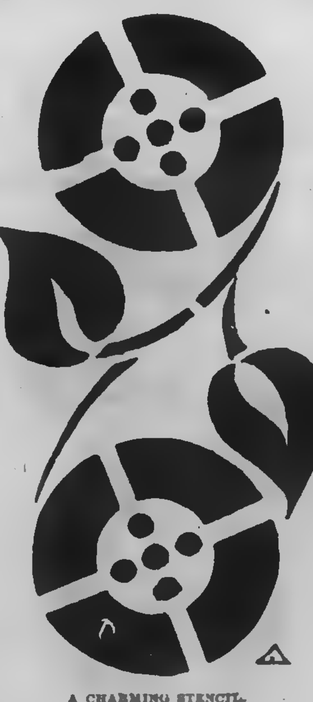
The business woman hasn't time for the work. She hasn't time to bargain hunt and to make over, and she does need new neckwear just once in awhile.

Wouldn't you like to see an honest and accurate statement of what it really costs some modestly but properly dressed business woman to clothe herself for a year? Wouldn't it be refreshing?

There is no doubt that there would be some little discrepancy between her figures and the $69.71 of the "natty and well dressed persons," but it would be a comfort to some of the people who can't make it on $69.71.

A Charming Stencil.

It is strange that women so seldom use their artistic talents upon beautifying their window hangings. The design illustrated is very attractive when applied to the border and valance of a window curtain. White or cream scrim stenciled in robin's egg blue makes a pleasing effect.



A CHARMING STENCIL.

Special Playing Cards.

Playing cards of a size and shape which make them specially desirable for women's euchres or bridges are new with the stationers. They are long and narrow, panel shaped, and are said on this account to be much easier for women to handle. The back has a decoration representing designs of rich lace.

GLASS SERVING TRAYS.

Particular Housewives Welcome This New Fad.

So many housekeepers have had their handsome mahogany trays ruined by hot dishes that they welcome the fad of the glass covered trays and tables.

One of the newest tea tables is of the old time square shape, with a top and shelf half way below. This is made of highly polished mahogany which a linen cover hardly protects from the heat of the tea service. A tray is made, however, to exactly fit the top, of heavy plate glass set in a rim of mahogany with broad brass handles.

This tray is carried into the drawing room at tea time with the entire tea service and hot water kettle on it, or if one has no maid the tray can be left on the table and the tea things put in readiness before the guests arrive.

The cost of such trays is an objection to many women. This can be greatly lessened if heavy pieces of glass are bought at a hardware store and are taken to a picture framer's to be framed in regular wooden picture molding.

This molding comes in all widths and prices of mahogany and cherry, and if one with a beveled edge is selected it will give a handsome finish to the tray. Heavy brass handles can also be bought at the hardware store, and one should be fastened to the molding at each end. The advantage of such trays is that they can be made in any desired size. The framing is apt to be cheaper if they are either square or oblong rather than round or oval.

Excited fans at a ball game at Pottsville, Pa., pounded each other with bats.

EARTHQUAKES.

Great Shocks Almost Always Followed by After Shocks.

Although seismologists have not yet succeeded in finding out any means of definitely predicting the occurrence of an earthquake, they are very hopeful of finally arriving at this desired goal, and already they can discern danger by the pulsations which are always gently agitating the surface of the earth. A sudden cessation of these heart beats is a danger signal, extreme stillness invariably preceding an earthquake, whereas constant tremors are a good sign.

A great earthquake is almost always followed by weaker ones, and when it is violent and destructive the number of minor shocks following it may amount to hundreds or even thousands and continue for several months or years.

The occurrence of after shocks is quite natural and necessary for the settling down into stable equilibrium of the disturbed tract at the origin of disturbance, each of these shocks removing an unstable or weak point underneath.

Further, as a very great shock would remove a correspondingly great underground instability it is probable that such a shock would not for a long time be followed by another of a magnitude comparable to its own in the same or a neighboring district.

When, however, the initial shock is not very great it may be followed by another like it, but even in this case the position of the origin of the second shock would usually be quite distinct from that of the first.—Wide World Magazine.

A CAMEL STORY.

Foiled in its Revenge, the Animal Committed Suicide.

Some years ago it chanced that a valuable camel working in an old mill in Africa was severely beaten by its driver, who, perceiving that the camel had treasured up the injury and was only waiting a favorable opportunity for revenge, kept a strict watch upon the animal. Time passed away. The camel, perceiving that it was watched, was quiet and obedient, and the driver began to think that the beating was forgotten.

One night after a lapse of several months the man, who slept on a raised platform in the mill, while, as is customary, the camel was stalled in a corner, happening to remain awake, observed by the bright moonlight that when all was quiet the animal looked cautiously around, rose softly and, stealing over toward a spot where a bundle of clothes and a burnoose, thrown carelessly on the ground, resembled a sleeping figure, cast itself with violence upon them, rolling with all its weight and tearing them most viciously with its teeth.

Satisfied that its revenge was complete, the camel was returning to its corner when the driver sat up and spoke. At the sound of his voice and perceiving the mistake it had made the animal was so mortified at the failure and discovery of its scheme that it dashed its head against the wall and died on the spot.—Sheffield Telegraph.

Lavender.

How many of those who delight in the odor of fresh sweet lavender ever think how the plant came by its soothing name? Back he must go in imagination to the clean old Romans and their cult of the bath. Lavender found high favor with them to perfume their baths, and it was they who called it lavandula, the root of the name being the Latin lavare—to wash. In olden days, too, lavender leaves were an important ingredient in the making of precious spikenard ointment. Although we regard lavender as so peculiarly English a plant, owing to its extensive cultivation in the home counties and its associations with our English homes and gardens, it was not, as a matter of fact, introduced to this country until the sixteenth century, when it came from France with the Huguenot settlers. The Romans did not apparently bring it to us when they gave us our fine roads.—Westminster Gazette.

"An Old Sheep."

A Bengali clerk who had been transferred at his own request from my office to another government office in Calcutta was anxious to return and wrote to me personally on the subject. Although not a Christian himself, he was evidently acquainted with the familiar lines of Bonar's hymn:

I was a wandering sheep,
I did not love the fold.

This is how he applied them to his own case, "It is true I have wandered from the fold—that is, the director general's office—but I trust that your honor will be merciful and receive back an old sheep."—"Stray Stories From India," by Sir Arthur Fanshawe, in Blackwood's Magazine.

Easily Remedied.

An old lawyer who is a noted wit has for a partner another old fellow who is very conservative and straitlaced. Recently the wit remarked to his partner that it was advisable to employ a female stenographer in the office, maintaining that stenographers of that variety were much more satisfactory than males.

But the partner didn't like the idea.

"My dear fellow," he objected, "I don't think it would be proper. It wouldn't do, wouldn't do at all. You see, here I should be in the office hour after hour every day, quite alone with the young lady, and"—

"Well," observed the wit, with a twinkling eye, "couldn't you holler?"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A.Y.P.A. OF ST. LUKE'S WERE ENTERTAINED

Large Number Spent an Enjoyable Evening—the Programme

The A.Y.P.A. of St. Luke's church spent its first social evening last night, and made it the occasion of entertaining the Anglican students of the Normal School. In point of sociability and attendance no better social has ever been spent at St. Luke's. Miss Electa Strong and Mr. Charles Crane, with the Rector, received the guests of the evening. In the unavoidable absence of the President, Miss Ethel Pakenham, the Rector, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, occupied the chair. The programme was as follows:—

Chairman's address of welcome —Dr. Langfeldt.

Instrumental Duet—Misses Elsie and Phyllis Dawson.

Vocal Solo—Mr. Kenneth Shook.

Instrumental Solo—Miss English.

Violin Solo—Dr. H. G. Park.

Vocal Solo—Miss Ruby Quartermaine.

Humorous Song—Mr. Chas. Coleman.

Vocal Solo—Mr. Dudley.

Accompanists—Misses Charlotte English, Helen Davies and Walton.

After the programme a "Riddle Game" was played, which was most interesting and amusing, and in which Miss Susie McCullough and Mr. Charels Crane obtained the prizes. Refreshments were then served and a most pleasant evening was brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem. The A.Y.P.A. is very much indebted to Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons for bunting and flags loaned to decorate the school room, and to Coleman Bros. for providing an abundance of ice cream.

WEDDING BELLS

GRAY—MONCRIEF

Special to the Review.

Bensfort, Oct. 14.—"Hilburst," the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Moncrief, of Bensfort, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on the 13th at 3.30 o'clock, when their only daughter Lavina Maude Stewart, was united in marriage to G. Arthur Gray, of Osage, Sask., Rev. Donald McKenzie, of Centreville, officiating. The wedding march was played by Miss Katie Leary, of Peterborough. About 60 guests were present. Following the ceremony Mrs. F. Waterman, of Bailieboro, sang sweetly a group of wedding songs.

The bride was given away by her father and wore a dainty gown of Tokio champagne silk trimmed with Irish lace. She carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses. Phyllis Hall, the little flowergirl, was attired in an embroidered princess gown and carried a basket of flowers.

The groom's gift to the bride was a twin diamond and emerald ring and a cabinet of silver, to the pianist and flower girl each a solid gold band bracelet. The bride and groom were the recipients of many useful and costly presents from their large circle of friends, among them being a purse of gold from the bride's mother, a piano from her father, a set of limoge china from her uncle, several pieces of cut glass, an oak clock and numerous other pretty things.

The bride's travelling costume was of brown cloth with hat of ameythist beaver and veil to match.

After the wedding dinner, which was served by Mr. Hooper, caterer, of Peterborough, the happy couple left for Peterborough and Toronto, where they will make a short visit and continue their journey to Osage, Sask., where they will be at home to their friends after November 15th.

KEITH—LAYING

Smith's Falls, Oct.—The marriage of Miss Lillian Isabell Layng, M.A., only daughter of Mr. Henry Layng, to Mr. Gordon Campbell Keith, M.E., B.Sc., managing editor of Canadian Machinery, took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Brockville street, here, last evening, in the presence of about 75 guests. The bride wore an empire gown of ivory duchess satin and carried a bouquet of white roses. Miss Alva Preston, of Athens, was bridesmaid, and Mrs. R. A. F. McDonald, wife of Prof. McDonald, Woodstock Baptist College, was matron of honor. Dr. W. J. Ower, of Montreal, supported the groom.

A reception followed and Mr. and Mrs. Keith took the midnight train for Toronto. Among the guests were friends from Ottawa, Montreal, Napanee, Woodstock and Toronto. The bride received a number of handsome gifts, including a check for a goodly sum from her father, and many beautiful articles of silver, cut glass, etc. Both bride and groom were clever students of the Smith's Falls high school.

The groom is a brother of Rev. H. J. Keith, B.D., of this city.

VILLAGE OF BANCROFT BEING DEPOPULATED OF BABIES

Madoc, Oct. 15.—A letter from a reliable source was received on Monday from Bancroft telling of the state of panic the northern village is undergoing through the many cases of infantile paralysis that is at present affecting its young children. The informant states that every day children were being sent out of the village to escape its blight, and calculated that by Wednesday, 13th inst., not less than twenty would be away. There are between twenty and thirty cases, we are informed, in Bancroft and L'Amable, and the doctors are completely baffled to find a cause for it. So far it affects only children of tender age, those of five years and over being immuned. The child attacked by the disease is first affected in the spine and limbs and sinks into a semi-comatose condition, and, if it does not succumb, it is left with a partially paralyzed body in most cases. One local doctor, speaking of the state of affairs in Bancroft and vicinity, stated that it was not an unheard of disease but the same that had appeared among the children in other localities some time since. It was a very old disease, in fact, being even mentioned in the Bible, yet, in the inner workings of the disease, it was unknown—an unsolvable mystery.

You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. THE EXAMINER

People generally read the editorial in last evening's Examiner with feelings of undisguised contempt. That the petitioners have been made the victims of circumstances which have shocked the entire community is a matter not only of local but general agreement. When a number of men are prepared to swear that they are all immaculate, they must be judged accordingly. Nothing could withstand that. The protest, as a consequence, was dropped, and the battle left drawn. But from the dawn of the campaign, over a year ago, to the present time, there has not been one single act or inclination on the part of Mr. Burnham or his supporters that did not show the fullest desire on their part to speak the truth and to court the light of day. Can those who assume to represent the great Liberal party in West Peterborough honestly say the same?

o—o—o

With regard to the "second company" as the Examiner calls it, in referring to the prosecution of Shepherd, few will be found who do not agree with the statement of the crown prosecutor who, in addressing the magistrate, said, in the most emphatic manner, that it was impossible to suppose that in the face of the evidence, the prisoner could be acquitted. This was not the statement of a lawyer, paid by clients, but of the crown prosecutor, paid by the crown, and acting solely on its behalf.

o—o—o

With regard to Gates and his affidavit, let it be said at the outset that the question of offering rewards for information was submitted to Mr. DuVernet, K.C., Mr. Burnham's leading counsel in November, 1908. He approved of it and endorsed it by letter, at the same time saying what, of course, was plain enough, that testimony paid for could not be expected to have the weight of volunteer testimony, but that it was perfectly legitimate. In fact, detectives are allowed by law, and are so thoroughly approved of by the courts that the latter will not compel any statement whatever concerning them or their employment to be made public. They are protected from all inquiry on the ground of its being most desirable in the public interest, that wrong-doing should be found out. Mr. Stratton's appeal for information regarding them to the courts was met with a very clear and distinct refusal. And finally the Gates affidavit was written down under the immediate superintendence and instruction of Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., the petitioner's solicitor, who himself paid Gates what he demanded, viz., $50,00, by cheque, and in the affidavit set the fact down that the information had been so paid for, and, moreover, that the affidavit was taken for purposes of the protest. What can be more frank, open and correct than that? If blame is to be connected with it, that blame must attach to two learned and high-standing lawyers who approved and directed the act, and paid for it, and Mr. Burnham willingly assumes responsibility with them. He has no desire to shirk it. No attempt whatever was made to conceal anything connected with it, and if Gates acknowledged himself in the witness box to be a liar, few will think that he did not then speak the truth and that he was worthy of imitation by some of the witnesses for the defence. That Gates acknowledged his infamy was something. It is vastly better than aggravating his position by perjury. There were some pitiful things at the trial of the protest, but none lay at the door of the petitioner. At whose door they lay is best judged by the community, who know the circumstances.

o—o—o

The attempt to ridicule Conservatives and the many Liberals who joined them in an honest endeavor to have a clean election will fail of its purpose. The petitioners were required by law to lay their evidence bare, if not the source of it, to those who knew how to make use of the knowledge acquired. It was a serious business and had to be met accordingly. No amount of bluffing from the Examiner can obscure the facts. The people know them. It is universally admitted that if the Liberal candidate had fought the fight as his opponent did, he would have been beaten out of sight. The constituency clearly did not want Mr. Stratton whatever it may have thought otherwise. He is welcome to what he has got, and those of his supporters who trembled from the day the protest was fyled to the day it was dropped have learned a lesson that may be of as much value to them as punishment. [illegible] leave [illegible] consciences the consciousness of the great wrong done and the method adopted of saving it from exposure in the courts. Perhaps the [illegible] has not been heard of it all. Scores of people are demanding that justice be done. Prominent Liberals who voted Liberal at the last election are, if anything loudest in the expression of their disgust. Again we say that Mr. Burnham has hidden nothing and has done nothing to bring a blush to his face. Canadian journals are demanding a law to reach such cases as that of West Peterborough, better protection for the petitioner's witnesses and the appointment of a Crown and not a private prosecutor. In Peterborough there was probably never before such an arousing of public opinion. It will be a long time before the evidence of the defence at the trial will be forgotten. It was surely a ghastly triumph.

NEW CARPET MAN AT CRESSMAN'S

Mr. W. J. Palmer, of Toronto, has taken full charge of the Home Furnishing department at Cressman's. He has for some time past been with the John Kay Co., Limited, Toronto, the well-known high class furnishers of Canada, and comes highly recommended as a first class carpet and drapery man.

Mr. Palmer intends to put in stock many new lines of rugs, carpets and draperies that should and will be looked for in Peterborough, and will put his department second to none in Eastern Ontario. Mr. Palmer is well up in artistic draping and will be pleased to offer suggestions to any one who wishes aid in this matter.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

WAS OFFERED $3,000 A WEEK TO SING IN A MUSIC HALL

But Madame Marchesi Turned Down Proposition—Grieves Over Singers Who Succumb to Lure of the Music Hall

The Montreal Daily Witness had an interesting interview with Madame Marchesi upon her arrival in Montreal a few days ago. The article will be read with interest here, as that famous artist will appear at the Grand Opera House, Peterborough, on Thanksgiving Day evening. The prices for seats will not be raised but will be the same as is usually charged for all good attractions. The best seats will be $1.50, while a large number will be sold at $1.00, 75c., and 50c. for reserved seats. The upper gallery will be 50 cents. Only one performance will be given, that in the evening, and already there are indications that there will be a large audience to hear this wonderful artist.

The management of the opera house are to be congratulated on securing such an excellent attraction for Thanksgiving Day, and the concert is likely to be largely patronized.

The interview is as follows:—

"Madame Marchesi has just arrived on the 'Megantic,' and will see you at the 'Place Viger' hotel, if you go down there at once."

This telephone message received at 11 o'clock this forenoon, broke with pleasant suddenness into the routine of a quiet morning's work; and twenty minutes after a 'Witness' reporter was bowing an acknowledgement of his introduction to the famous singer.

It was a most interesting interview which followed. After a brief, characteristic comment or two regarding her trip across from England, and her present tour, she drifted in the most natural manner into a discourse on spiritism, or 'spiritualism,' as Madame Marchesi prefers to call it—a subject in which she says she is "terrible" interested, and to which she devotes a good deal of study, believing it to be one of the most colossally important questions in the world to-day. From that discussion she passed on to a disquisition on the peculiar situation which exists in England, at the present time, between the great artists and the music halls. She deprecates with the strongest language at her command this, to her, deplorable fact that the famous artists, such as Albani, and, most recent instance, Ben Davies, are falling a prey to the lures of the music hall agents, and their tempting offers of fabulous salaries.

"Perhaps, twenty years from now, such ideas will be looked upon as foolish," said Madame Marchesi. "Perhaps I am old-fashioned. But oh, it is a great grief to me to see our best, the aristocracy of the artistic world, going into the music halls."

Madame Marchesi states that just before leaving on her present tour she herself received an offer of six hundred pounds a week, nearly three thousand dollars, for as long a term as she wished, from a music hall agency. Failing her acceptance of that, she was asked to name her price.

"I smiled," said Madame Marchesi, "but I didn't smile very much. It was a magnificent offer, a tremendous one, and we all like to make money; but how could I accept? I stand at the top of my profession; then my mother—why, I could not think of it! There are things under the sun which are impossible. A general could not permit himself to play a role in a pantomime."

"But isn't it unfortunate that I cannot? It is like cruelty to animals that I have to refuse such an offer." And Madame smiled with real regret.

The first impression one forms of Madame Marchesi is that she is ample of figure. One is immediately attracted by her face and voice, however. The former is expressive, and marked by the play of a strong personality, and the latter is musical and pleasant. Her Italian accent is sufficiently noticeable to distinguish her tone, and from time to time she drops into little dramatic mannerisms as she talks, rather pleasing in their effect.

"When did you say I am to sing?" she asked the manager, when the newspaperman had made known his errand. "On Tuesday? O-o-o-h!"—and she shivered, and ventured a tentative cough to test her throat. Such cabbage as we saw coming over! And the temperature, it feel so low, we are free-e-zing to death!

"Oh, yes! I have been over before. I was in Montreal in February last, and only completed a tour through the United States in March. But our reception was so good, that explains why we are here again so soon.

"I am giving a series of one hundred concerts. My second one will be at Ottawa, where we will be entertained in the home of the Governor-General. I appear in New York on November 18, and go on down to Mexico and Cuba.

"My last tour was eighty-five concerts. Between the eighty-five tour and the one hundred tour I have lived at my home in London, with my house and my garden, and my parrots, and my dogs, and my little boy from Paris.

"I have enjoyed myself so very much. Each week-end there were trips, garden parties, entertainments. The Duchess of Connaught, the Duchess of Somerset, all the highest society of England were so kind to entertain me. Then a great deal of my time I spent with Agnes and Egerton Castle.

MME. MARCHESI
Who Appears in the Grand Opera House Thanksgiving Day Evening

Such interesting and such intellectual people they are, and such a loving husband and wife. They are perfectly charming.

"They are greatly interested in spiritism, and I am so interested, terribly interested! We would have such long talks together, and tell each other such awful stories that nobody could sleep!" Madame laughed heartily at the remembrance.

"But," she said, becoming at once serious again, "it is a very important study. I believe in spiritualism in this way—I believe that science will one day not only meet religion, will go so far that finally everything in religion will be explain by science, just as two and two makes four. What religion? Why, the only religion; the one that has come down for two thousand years."

Madame Marchesi discoursed at some length on the music hall problem. For years, no attempt, she says, was made to build up a national opera in England. Consequently, the music halls, as the people tired of concerts, got the patronage of the masses. Now, however, people are tiring of the men who perform with dogs, men who stand on their heads, and those who as Madame expressed it, "sing in their tummy." They were delighted to hear a serious song, because it was a change. The result was, that intermingled with the acrobat and clown acts, may be seen now the peculiar sight of a famous artist singing, or a scene from a great opera.

"It has been a great grief to me," said Madame. "Albani, because of her need, had to accept the offer they made her. Greatest grief of all, Ben Davies our first tenor, last week joined the ranks."

Edward Lloyd, she said, predicted years ago that this would happen.

As a result, however, an appreciation of music art was beginning to grow up. In time, perhaps, the British would be educated to accept a purely artistic programme.

Madame Marchesi is accompanied by her husband, Baron Caccamisi.

BOYS HEARD FINE ADDRESS

Rev. D. C. Cook, B. D. Tells Them About His Work in India

An interesting meeting was held in Knox church last night when a large number of boys with their friends gathered to hear the Rev. D. C. Cock, B.D., of India. A very appropriate quartette, entitled "The Business of the King," was rendered by Messrs. Gadey, Davenport, Thompson and Dickson.

The Rev. Mr. Cock gave an exceedingly racy description of the very important influence of British rule in India and the East generally. In travelling in the east the British flag counted for much in law and order.

At Colombo in Ceylon and other ports it was interesting to see that the Sabbath was well observed so far as loading or unloading ships was concerned.

He had enjoyed his work amongst the boys of India. As athletes they could take their stand with Canadians and as students they in many respects, seemed to be their superior.

A Cambridge principal said that he would not be afraid to take 100 boys from the schools in India and place them alongside of 100 in Britain and feel that they would take a most favorable stand in examination. Our greatest problem, however, is the religious side of their life.

When you think of the greatness of India, its millions of Mahommedans and its greater millions of Hindoos, the opportunity demands attention.

These boys are exceedingly bright. One case is especially interesting. He was only 16 years of age and he asked to write examinations with the teachers' course. The missionary was somewhat interested and queried concerning his standing. When he learned that he had received certificates for three different grades. The young lad tried the examination and received highest men's and teachers' diploma. That boy was a famine child who had to be fed with a spoon and for six weeks could not lift a hand for absolute weakness.

There are some 25 blind boys who are taught to read the Bible with the raised type. All these learn some useful trade suitable to their condition.

Another interesting case was a young lad whose leg was amputated. He was quite a scholar and went to Indore College. When he returned to Nbow he held up in great glee a medal which he had received from the Governor-General of India for his work on the parallel bars.

Mr. Cock emphasized the fact that while the industrial school cared for the bodies of the children, the great and main purpose was to save them and make them followers of Christ and this work was going on all the time with very encouraging results.

The Rev. Mr. Keith spoke of the great pleasure it had been for the boys of Knox to have a little share in helping on this work, and knew that they would do more in the future.

Mr. Gordon Hall occupied the chair.

The Rev. G. W. Rose, of Alton, Ont., and Rev. J. G. Potter, of St. Andrew's were among the visitors present.

At the conclusion of the addresses Master Shepherd in a neat speech, moved a resolution of thanks to the Rev. Mr. Cock for his encouraging address. This was heartily supported.

THANK-OFFERING MEETING HELD

Mr. D. C. Cock Addressed the Ladies of St. Andrew's Church

The annual thankoffering meeting of the W. F. M. S. of St. Andrew's church was held in the lecture room last night.

Mrs. Potter, president of the Auxiliary, occupied the chair. After devotional exercises Mrs. D. C. Cock, of India, gave a most interesting address on the work in India.

The impression received was that the missionaries in India are always busy—the work ever increasing—and that work is telling on the moral and spiritual life in India.

The address was full of the deepest value to any student of social science as well as missionary service.

No work could be of greater value to a nation's needy ones than the work that is being conducted in the industrial schools and colleges of British India.

Miss Olive Howell sang an appropriate solo, after which the meeting closed with singing and prayers.

Just arrived, fresh Cranberries and Sweet Potatoes. Full line of Vegetables, Finnan Haddie, Ciscoe Herring and Oysters fresh for Saturday. S. A. Oke. 2d

Two Mills Using Same Quality of Wheat May Not Produce Same Quality of Flour

The quality of flour largely depends on the milling. Two mills might grind wheat of the same quality and the product of one far outclass the other. It is not only the high quality of the hard wheat used, but also the superior milling facilities, that places "PURITY" flour so far above all others. Our milling plant at St. Boniface, Manitoba, cost nearly $1,000,000, and is one of the most perfectly equipped mills in the world. The wheat itself is subjected to the most wonderful system of cleaning and scouring, passing through twenty distinct machines. Fifty-five steel rollers, the largest in Canada, reduce the wheat into flour. Then it is purified and dressed by "bolting" it through silk sifters of fine mesh. Not a "branny" particle or speck of dust is ever found in "Purity" Flour.

You may have to pay a little more for Purity, but baking results, quality and quantity, prove it is worth far more than the slight difference.

We have two other modernly equipped mills at Brandon, Man., and Goderich, Ont.

THE LOCAL OPTION MOVEMENT IN THE CITY

The Matter Appearing in This Department is Furnished by the Peterboroug Temperance and Moral Reform League Which Has Arranged for its Publication.

MIDLAND FOR EXAMPLE

Among those who, through self interest or ignorance of the facts, are opposed to local option, the argument most frequently heard is that it will kill the town. The best answer is to look for places that have been killed in this way, and if any can be found, then compare their conditions with those of Peterborough. After a diligent search, however, we have failed to find any place that has died from this cause. On the contrary, we find that without exception, business has increased, crime and violence decreased, and taxes are lower. Midland is a live town in which local option has now been in force for some time. Listen to the results as told by three prominent citizens.

Three statements are herewith submitted. The first is by the Mayor of the town, the second is by the police magistrate, and the third is taken from a letter written by the principal officer of the local branch of the Canada Iron Corporation, a large and important business organization.

What the Mayor Says

Public sentiment is stronger here to-day in favor of local option than when we carried the measure by a sixty-seven per cent. vote.

Notwithstanding the fact that we have no liquor license fees, and are paying annual instalments to the amount of about five thousand dollars on a park, new school and cement sidewalks costing in the aggregate of about seventy thousand dollars, on which we paid nothing during the last license year, our rate of taxation is no higher to-day than it was then. The question may be asked, "From what source do we get the money to pay for these additional advantages?" The answer is simply, "By our enormous increase in assessment, largely due to a heavy advance in building operations." Our citizens now have money to invest in this way.

You ask for a brief statement. The advantages resulting from the by-law are too numerous to mention in detail and be brief. I can only say that I most heartily endorse it from every standpoint.

I may just say that I received so many inquiries last fall respecting this matter, I prepared an outline of my views, a copy of which I now hand you; this you are at liberty to use as you wish, particularly those clauses I have marked. I presume the question which presents itself to every municipality considering the adoption of local option is what general advantages and disadvantages will follow, and will the former be sufficiently in excess of the latter to warrant the change? I can assure you that, judging from Midland's experience, no municipality will make any mistake or injuriously affect any phase of its welfare by adopting local option, but, on the other hand, will be so pleased with its results that they would not, under any consideration, return to license system, with its consequent evils. The results of efforts in other municipalities to repeal local option by-laws the last two years amply justify this statement.

E. Letherby.

The Police Magistrate's Opinion

There can be no question that local option has been a great benefit to the town. I would never dream of going back to the old system.

Driving to Penetanguishene does not create the trouble it did during the first month of local option.

In my official capacity I was constantly troubled by complaints from wives abused by drunken husbands. I have none of this now, showing that conditions in the home have changed greatly for the better.

F. W. Jeffrey.

Prominent Business Man Speak

(My observations of its [illegible] have largely been in [illegible] the workmen of the firm with which I am connected. Previous to the closing of the bars, it was the usual thing for many of our men to be absent from duty for two or three days after each pay day, and after any shut-down of the works we always had some difficulty to get a full staff when starting up again. With the advent of Local Option this has ceased. We now experience no difficulty after pay days, or after temporary shutdown. Unquestionably, Local Option has given us more steady, reliable and contented workmen.

The laboring classes are undoubtedly the largest gainers by the closing of the bars. This is borne out by the fact that we are now served with fewer garnishees against our employees' wages than was formerly the case, indicating that they are paying their obligations as they go along, and in many cases, liquidating old debts.

The conditions of our streets, and the atmosphere pervading them, speaks so well for the effectiveness of Local Option, to those acquainted with former conditions, that this phase of the question requires no comment.

A. C. ADAMS

THE FALLACIOUS LIQUOR ARGUMENT FROM SCRIPTURE

(We are told that there is no condemnation of alcoholic drinks in the Ten Commandments of the Bible, and that thousands of the best men that have ever lived and that live to-day use them. Is that a conclusive argument in their favor? Does the progress of civilization and morals sanction all that the Bible in its very words does not condemn? It is possible to form a pretty plausible argument on Scriptural grounds for polygamy and concubinage at the present day, and we have known Christian ministers who have conscientiously defended them, strange as this may sound.

Will anybody show us where the Scriptures forbid slavery? Point out where they condemn war in a sense that clearly forbids Christian nations from cutting each other's throats. Show us any clear and uncontradicted warrant for a republican form of government, or for the political equality of all men. For dreary ages, the supposed "divine rights of kings" was urged against popular government on Bible grounds. There are a score of blemishes of society for which a verbal argument may be made from the Scriptures, but which the spirit of the Scriptures interpreted by the Spirit of God working therein for advancing civilization, condemns. The old legal maxim for the law's interpretation is qui haeret in litera haeret in cortice, "he who sticks in the letter sticks in the bark," he does not get to the heart of the matter.

(Where is there anything in the Bible against the lottery or gambling? Indeed, an argument that would justify gambling is found in the declaration that "the lot is cast into the lap, but the disposal thereof is of the Lord." The church of our fathers raised money by the lottery.

Point out to us anything in the Bible against procuring wives by purchase, as is the custom among many nations to-day.

There are some things which are supposed to be left to nature and decency to teach us, without specific Scriptural commands. It will never do to argue that what is not forbidden in the [illegible] is permitted. Practices sanctioned in the Scriptures may not always wisely or safely be practised in our own.

(When science is universally condemning the use of alcoholics as a drink by men in normal health, when morality is pointing out its manifest evils to society, when enlightened business is showing its bad economics, it is no time to be lugging in the Scriptures to bolster up a failing evil cause that an advancing Christian civilization founded upon a truer apprehension of the spirit of the Scriptures condemns.—"American Issue."

IS PROBITION RIGHT?

That is the fundamental question. We should not ask first whether prohibition will pay better than license. Economics should yield that place to ethics. If prohibition of the liquor traffic is a wrong principle, it should never have a place in our government, even though it would increase our prosperity one hundredfold.

Nor should the righteousness of the cause be made secondary to its practicability. We dare not say, "Prohibition is right enough, but it won't work." Duty is ours, results belong to God.

The principle of prohibition is right. Most of the laws of the land are based upon the principle. We prohibit murder, burglary, arson and other evil things. Hence we recognize the rightsomeness of the principle.

But should the liquor traffic be placed in the same category as these things? Only upon one ground. If the traffic in intoxicants works evil to mankind, then it should be treated as other evils.

The contention of the prohibitionists is that liquor is doing more injury to society to-day than anything else. We say it is worse to make a man a drunkard than to steal his property, burn his house or even murder him. That is a fearful indictment, but we are confident that we have mountains of facts to substantiate it.

The only thing to do with an evil is to prohibit it. The liquor traffic is an evil and must not be legalized. Prohibition for this wrong is the only sane and tenable position to take.—"Clean Politics."

WORKING MEN AND LOCAL OPTION

The Voice, of Winnipeg, a labor journal, publishes a statement by the Rev. Chas. Steltzle, which sets out the attitude that workingmen ought to assume towards the liquor traffic, and the question of Local Option. It says in part;

The matter of Local Option is simply an application to the saloon business of the principle of the referendum, for which organized labor has been so long contending. Whether or not, in certain communities, the people had an opportunity of freely expressing their will, is not the question as issue just now. It is the principle of whether or not the people have the right to express that will if they are given a chance, and having expressed it, the courts shall accept their decision as final. It must not be said against organized labor that it stands for the referendum only upon such questions as it is sure will be decided upon in its favor. Organized labor must be willing to submit to the people every question which concerns the welfare of the community, and as loyal citizens—and as loyal trade unionists—they should abode by the decision of the majority, when the question under consideration has to do with the well-being of all the people.

The whole matter of the saloon, so far as the average workingman is concerned, has to purely with personal indulgence and the satisfaction of his appetite. It should be no great hardship to him to make the sacrifice which will bring joy and happiness to millions of women and children—to say nothing about the men who, on account of weaker wills, cannot withstand the temptations of strong drink.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

There are now in progress in Ontario local option campaigns in over 130 municipalities affecting more than 500 licenses.

Among those who will go with Peterborough into the prohibition column next year are the neighboring towns of Lindsay, Port Hope and Cobourg. In all of them the temperance forces are active, vigorous and well organized.

All temperance advocates are proud of the splendid work that is being done by the local Catholic Total Abstenance Society, and hear with satisfaction of the rapid progress that is being made. A campaign is now under way to raise the membership to 1,000 by the end of the present year. Judging from the achievement of the past there is no fear of failure. The T.A.S. alone will have almost enough votes to carry local option in January.

Friends are reminded that the address of the treasurer is A. Brown, 396 Water street.

ADVICE FROM A MOTHER TO ALL OTHER MOTHERS

The young mother—the inexperienced mother—is always glad to get the advice of the more experienced in the care of her little one. Thousands of mothers have emphatically said that there is no medicine equal to Baby's Own Tablets for keeping little ones well, or restoring health if illness comes suddenly. The young mother can safely follow the lead of these others. Mr. John Shortill, Georgetown, Ont., says:—"I would not be a day without Baby's Own Tablets in the house. I believe they saved my youngest child's life. At the age of three months she cried all the time with indigestion. Our doctor did all he could for her, but did not seem to help her. Then I got Baby's Own Tablets and they worked a wonderful change. They seemed to tone the stomach, move the bowels regularly, and she has ever since been a healthy child." Frog Industry in France.

It is in France that the frog was first generally used for food, and it is in that country that the industry of frog farming has been most largely developed. The green frog exists abundantly throughout France wherever there are marshes, ponds or sedgy margins of rivers or bays that contain fresh or slightly brackish water.

The best outfit for frog raising is one or more shallow ponds or reservoirs filled with grasses and other water plants. It should be so situated that the water can be partially drawn off so as to facilitate the labor of catching. If, as is often the case, the pond already abounds in frogs they are simply protected and left for a year or two to propagate. If food does not prove abundant the owner throws in live earthworms, as the frog is a carnivorous animal and prefers the food, whether worms, larvae or insects, fresh and in normal living condition. If no frogs exist in the water they are planted, either living or in the form of eggs, which hatch when the water becomes warm, in April.—Popular Mechanics.

And Other Ladies.

After making out a list of its awards of medals and prizes one of the juries of the Paris exposition of 1900 decided to celebrate the completion of its labors by giving an informal little dinner at which the members of the jury, representing many nationalities, could meet far more agreeably as private individuals; hence it was decidedly unexpected when, after they had reached the stage of coffee and cigars, the British member of the jury rose with great solemnity and said, "Gentlemen, I propose the health of her majesty the queen."

This staggered everybody for a moment; but, innate courtesy overcoming national prejudice, they quickly pulled themselves together and drank the toast with all the honors.

No sooner, however, had this been accomplished than the American member rose and, poising his glass in the air, said simply, "And other ladies."

Needless to say this equally unexpected toast was received with enthusiasm by all.

BY A. T. ASHMORE.

FABRICS which drape gracefully and have sufficient weight or body to hang in rather stately folds are among those which are being used most lavishly for cloth costumes for the autumn and early winter. The reign of the goddess of simplicity seems to be entirely over in the realm of fashion as regards the lines of a costume which is to be other than a strictly tailored gown. As regards trimming, simplicity of design is still to be noted to some extent, but the general effect of most of the new costumes is that of a full, flowing and rather elaborately draped garment whose lines of construction would defy any but an expert modiste to define at a glance.

Long skirts are to be seen on most of the new gowns, and in the very beautiful cloths, heavy satin and voiles de soie, of which they are made the trained effects are most attractive.

Some of the skirts lie on the ground at the sides and in front almost as much as in the back, while many of the others have long and full trains rounding gracefully out beneath a complicated overdrapery of the same material. What the sanitary experts will say to this revival of long and trained skirts is something to be wondered about, for while the skirts which are of round length, with a slight train, are not difficult to keep clear of the ground when not too full, the full skirts, which lie on the ground all around, are most difficult to pick up. The fashion is another demonstration of the fact that gowns are designed for those who go about in carriages, and yet even such favorites of fortune will find it difficult to keep their skirts quite clean and fresh about the feet even in the mere transit from carriage to house. For indoor gowns only do many of these new designs seem truly appropriate, but they are intended, and will doubtless be worn, for calling and afternoon reception costumes, for luncheon, the matinee, &c.

MOST beautiful are the cloths and other fabrics shown for these new costumes. Soft and supple to a remarkable extent, they take the lines of the drapery exquisitely and at the same time have sufficient body to hang in dignified lines. The trimming on many of these gowns is extremely simple, consisting sometimes merely of velvet bands, and again of only a few inconspicuous, rather small buttons covered with the material. On other gowns there is wonderfully handsome embroidery in silk, wool or beads, but not in most cases a large amount of it. Braid is also used to carry out the designs of embroidery, but here, too, in most cases the trimming is characterized by an elegant simplicity rather than elaboration in quantity. Transparent guimpes or chemisettes of tulle, net, chiffon and lace are still seen in most of the new gowns, and in many of them there are either ruffles of lace or tulle at the wrist or a shallow cuff made of some transparent fabric in the color of the gown or in white, cream or ecru.

Women who are short or stout or those who are excessively slender and not possessed of naturally graceful lines will find the fashion most trying. It is not one which lends itself readily to graceful and artistic development for the ordinary wearer and by the ordinary modiste.

ONLY the most adroit management of materials can produce the new gowns with their fulness of material and arrangement of drapery and achieve at the same time the height and slenderness of effect which is still the aim of Dame Fashion's heart. Again, the woman who is neither slender nor tall will be compelled to suffer and struggle in her attempts to wear the clothes of the moment without looking clumsy and bulky. If she can afford to employ the most perfect skill in dressmaking she will be wonderfully able to appear well even under the trying conditions which Fashion has set for her to meet, but if she is obliged to be content with only mediocre attainments in the modiste's art she will be obliged to devote a great deal of persistent thought and study into the arrangement if they are to be satisfactory.

Most charming for a slender figure is a model in rose cloth trimmed with silk soutache and lace. The gown has a long skirt, side and fronts, with a full train. The skirt has absolutely no trimming, the sweep of the material being notably decorative.

The overdrapery is laid in pleats in the front of the skirt at the belt line. Over the hips the material is plain, the back being pleated in soft, irregular pleats, as is the front. The overdrapery is shorter in the front and slopes down toward the sides, extending well over the train in the back. The drapery of the front is gracefully held in place by being carried a little to the sides toward the bottom of the skirt, where it is held in and fastened by a scarf of the material twisted under the back drapery in the complicated fashion now so noticeable.

This costume has a rather deep belt, which is laid in folds. The belt is quite at the normal waist line, and, indeed, most of the gowns of this style are very little, if any, short waisted. Besides the elaborate braiding in soutache which decorates the bodice this model shows a rather deep V shaped chemisette of lace and tucked chiffon, over which the lower part of the bodice extends in a point. The close fitting sleeves are of tucked chiffon and lace and are fastened at the cuffs with small buttons.

Almost without trimming is a gown of gray cloth among the new models. The skirt has a very full under part most gracefully arranged with a long rounding train. Over this is a drapery which is quite close fitting across the front and over the hips and which does not meet across the back at the top. It is so pulled around the figure that a V shaped space of the underskirt of the gown shows in the back at the line of the hips. The drapery of this overskirt shows the skill of the modiste, for, while it is so close fitting and even scant over the hips, it widens out just above the knees with very full lines and is taken up at the left side and drawn toward the back in a many folded scarf. Both ends of the drapery are tied and caught in on the right side.

THE bodice of this costume is tight fitting, with a fichu drapery, quite plain, over the back and front. There is a chemisette of lace and a high collar. Over the chemisette are two bands of black velvet carried from the middle of the back up over the shoulders and down to a point at the front of the chemisette. The plain tight fitting sleeves have shallow tight undersleeves of lace and tulle.

So fine and soft are the serges which are now offered for sale that the material in some of its varieties is capable of successful employment in models such as formerly have been considered quite unsuitable for this fabric. A most attractive gown for the autumn is made of marine blue serge, with trimmings of black embroidery, and while this particular model is not one in which there is drapery there are others shown in serge in which the material has been employed almost as broadcloth or cashmere would be. This model is one of the few of this season's gowns which are made with short skirts, and it is a particularly happy compromise between the very plain frock, or rather tailored suit, meant only for wear in the mornings, and the more dressy cloth costume for afternoon wear.

For afternoon gowns which are to be used on formal occasions the use of tulle, chiffon, satin and embroidery in combination continues popular. Many of the new gowns, which have figured or plain satin or brocade as a foundation, are veiled partially with tulle, satin or net in the form of a tunic or overskirt. Polka dotted satin and that having checked, plaid or striped designs in, so to speak, submerged effects are seen among the new fabrics for these elaborate afternoon gowns. The diaphanous overdress of plain color is trimmed with embroidery of the same tone, or perhaps in the tints used to mark out the design in the underdress.

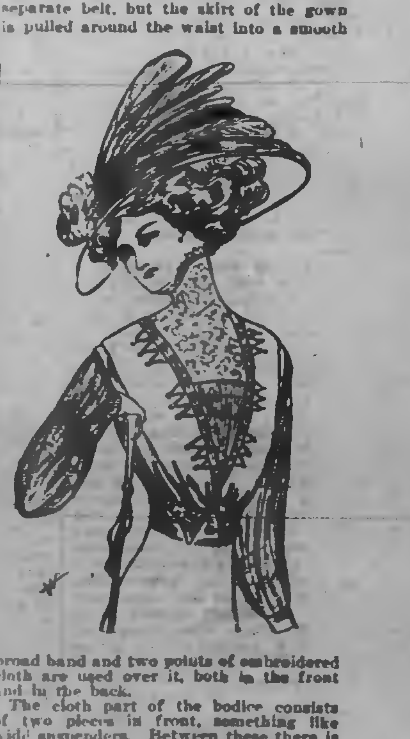
As yet there seems to have been no change in the intention of the fashion designers to keep the sleeves of all gowns flat at the top with an effect of sloping shoulders. The sleeves are also almost all quite close fitting and many of them are plain except for a finish of tulle, lace or chiffon at the wrist. There are, however, many trimmed sleeves also made up of a variety of materials, fine tucked or pleated tulle, chiffon or other transparent fabrics being used with the material of the gown and lace and embroidery to make up most fascinating sleeves. Whether the sleeve shall achieve its distinction from being remarkably plain or remarkably elaborate in detail is a matter that is absolutely to be decided by the comparative becomingness of the different styles to the wearer. The soft fabrics, lace, chiffon, &c., and the variety of detail are much more becoming to a thin arm or to a very plump one usually than a plain sleeve made of the material of the gown. But if the upper arm is unusually pretty, then, of course, the decree of the plain sleeve is an eagerly accepted blessing.

BELTS seem to have returned to the highest favor with modistes, if the styles now being put forward are any criterion. Perhaps the world of women at large who have found the princess and Empire styles as a whole becoming and attractive will be loath to see them go, but the modistes, who have by this time certainly succeeded in equipping all the women in the world with several garments in these styles, have about decided that from this time on belts it must be, and belts at the normal waist line, too. This does not mean that the vogue of the Empire and the princess is over, for at this age of the world a certain amount of independence has been achieved even by the woman of fashion, who for picturesque occasions, at least, insists upon some individual preferences even in the matter of clothes, but there is a decided showing of well defined waist lines in all the really new models, which seems to mark the fact that the end of the Empire and princess reign is an affair of no very distant date, at least for the great majority of women.

There are many new models which are not at all plain, of course, but the most distinctively new models have decidedly that effect and carry one's memories back to the fashion books of many years ago. One cannot but imagine, by way of completing the picture, the return of the parted hair and long curls of the former days when women appeared in these full skirts and trains and over draperies, plain bodices with flat shoulders and tight, smooth sleeves. Certainly there is something very graceful and charming in the whole effect of these styles, but just as certainly they are not very practical, and if we are to have the long curls and the trains we may be sure that we will also be obliged to endure many sad sermons from those who set themselves to admonish and correct the more frivolous half of mankind for their idleness and folly.

Gray Cloth and Chiffon Gown.

GRAY cloth and chiffon are combined the figure. The skirt is a plain one. in the figure. The skirt is a plain one, somewhat high waisted and finished with a peculiar belt. There is, in fact, no separate belt, but the skirt of the gown is pulled around the waist into a smooth broad band and two points of embroidered cloth are used over it, both in the front and in the back.



The cloth part of the bodice consists of two pieces in front, something like wide suspenders. Between these there is a full V shaped vest of chiffon, and above this a deep square yoke of white lace, with a wide collar of the same. The sleeves are of the chiffon, quite full and with a deep cuff of the same. The chiffon in the sleeves is plaited in at the armholes.

SOAP

We want every woman in this city to know how good Taylor's Borax Soap is. So we are making this unprecedented offer. Cut out the coupon in the lower right hand corner of this advertisement, take it to your grocer today, and he will hand you a 5c cake of Taylor's Borax Soap absolutely free.

Taylor's
ESTABLISHED 1865

BORAX SOAP

Here is the utmost in a laundry soap!

It is the one soap which outlasts all others—two to one. It is the laundry soap which makes the whitest clothes and cleans without injuring delicate laces or shrinking heavy woollens.

And we're going to let you prove it absolutely at our expense.

For we want you to know, as over a million Canadian women already do, what Taylor's Borax Soap will do for you, how much more economical it is, and how much better work it does than any other soap in Canada.

It is a white soap, made from pure cocoanut oil from the Isle of Ceylon.

This oil is boiled doubly long and mixed with borax. Then every bar is molded under a 30 ton pressure to press out the moisture. It goes through an ageing process equal to standing six months in your pantry.

So the pressure and the ageing make a firm, compact cake of soap, one that will lather well, yet not dissolve into slime like an ordinary soap.

The borax in it softens the water, and makes the clothes white and sweet with half the rubbing.

Borax also keeps the hands soft and white.

You don't have to boil the clothes unless you wish. For this soap dissolves and removes the dirt quickly and easily without boiling.

It has qualities no other soap possesses, for no other soap is made with so much care or with such costly materials.

Yet it costs but 5c a cake everywhere.

But we prefer to let the soap itself win you.

So we offer you today absolutely free, a regular 5c cake at our expense. Use it on your next wash day, then decide whether it is a better soap than you ever tried before. All we ask is that you make the test--the soap will prove its own merits. Send in your coupon today.

This Astounding Offer

is made because we know if you once try Taylor's Borax you will never be content to use any other Soap in your laundry. It would probably take thousands of dollars spent in advertising to induce you to buy your first cake, and by making this liberal offer we save both time and money in introducing to you the most wonderful laundry soap in Canada.

We can afford to buy but one cake for each family. Get yours today.

Chapter 28

RUTHVEN was after his divorce. That was what it all meant. His first check on the long trail came with the stupefying news of Gerald's runaway marriage to the young girl he was laying his own plans to marry some day in the future, and at first the news staggered him, leaving him apparently no immediate incentive for securing his freedom.

But Ruthven instantly began to realize that what he had lost he might not have lost had he been free to shoulder aside the young fellow who had forestalled him. The chance had passed—that particular chance. But he'd never again allow himself to be caught in a position where such a chance could pass him by because he was not legally free to at least make the effort to seize it.

Fear in his soul had kept him from blazoning his wife's infirmity to the world as cause for an action against her, but he remembered Neergard's impudent cruise with her on the Niobrara, and he had temporarily settled on that as a means to extort revenue, not intending such an action should ever come to trial. And then he learned that Neergard had gone to pieces. That was the second check.

Ruthven needed money. He needed it because he meant to put the ocean between himself and Selwyn before commencing any suit, whatever ground he might choose for entering such a suit. He required capital on which to live abroad during the proceedings if that could be legally arranged. And meanwhile, preliminary to any plan of campaign, he desired to know where his wife was and what might be her actual physical and mental condition.

But Ruthven was totally unprepared for the report brought him by a private agency to the effect that Mrs. Ruthven was apparently in perfect health, living in the country, maintaining a villa and staff of servants; that she might be seen driving a perfectly appointed Cossack sleigh any day with a groom on the rumble and a companion beside her; that she seemed to be perfectly sane; healthy in body and mind, comfortable, happy and enjoying life under the protection of a certain Captain Selwyn, who paid all her bills and at certain times was seen entering or leaving her house at Edgewater.

Excited, incredulous, but hoping for the worst, Ruthven had posted off to his attorneys. To them he naively confessed his desire to be rid of Alixe. He reported her misconduct with Neergard—which he knew was a lie—her pretense of mental prostration, her disappearance and his last interview with Selwyn in the card room. He also gave a vivid description of that gentleman's disgusting behavior and his threats of violence during that interview.

To all of which his attorneys listened very attentively, bade him have no fear of his life, requested him to make several affidavits and leave the rest to them for the present.

Which he did, without hearing from them until Mr. Hallam telegraphed him to come to Edgewater if he had nothing better to do.

Mr. Hallam was a very busy, very sanguine, very impetuous young man, and when he met Ruthven at the Edgewater station he told him promptly that he had the best case on earth; that he, Hallam, was going to New York on the next train, now almost due, and that Ruthven had better drive over and see for himself how gayly his wife maintained her household, for the Cossack sleigh, with its gray crimson tchug, had but just returned from the usual afternoon spin, and the young chatelaine of Willow Villa was now on the snow covered lawn, romping with the coachman's huge white wolfhound. Ruthven drove to the villa.

There were clumps of evergreens about, tall cedars, a bit of bushy foreland and a stretch of snow. And across this open space of snow a young girl was moving, followed by a white wolfhound. Once she paused, hesitated, looked cautiously around her. Ruthven, hiding behind a bush, saw her thrust her arm into a low evergreen shrub and draw out a shining object that glittered like glass. Then she started toward the house again.

At first Ruthven thought she was his wife. Then he was not sure, and he cast his cigar away and followed, slinking forward among the evergreens. But the youthful, fur clad figure kept straight on to the veranda of the house, and Ruthven, curious and determined to find out whether it was Alixe or not, left the semi-shelter of the evergreens and crossed the open space just as the woman's figure disappeared around an angle of the veranda.

Vexed, determined not to return without some definite discovery, Ruthven stepped upon the veranda. Just around the angle of the porch he heard a door opening, and he hurried forward, impatient and absolutely unafraid, anxious to get one good look at his wife and be off.

But when he turned the angle of the porch there was no one there. Only an open door confronted him, with a big, mild eyed wolfhound standing in the doorway looking steadily up at him.

Ruthven glanced somewhat dubiously at the dog; then as the animal made no offensive movement he craned his fleshy neck striving to see inside the house.

He did see—nothing very much, only the same young girl, still in her furs, emerging from an inner room, her arms full of dolls.

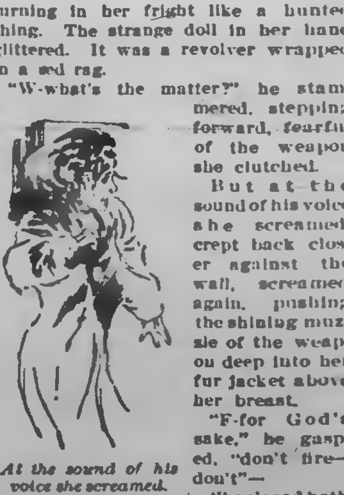
In his eagerness to see more Ruthven pushed past the great white dog, who withdrew his head disdainfully from the unceremonious contact, but quietly followed Ruthven into the house, standing beside him, watching him out of great, limpid, deerlike eyes.

But Ruthven no longer heeded the dog. His amused and slightly sneering gaze was fastened on the girl in furs who had entered what appeared to be a living room to the right and now, down on her knees beside a couch, smiling and talking confidentially and quite happily to herself, was placing her dolls against the wall.

Then the great white dog growled very low, and the girl in the fur jacket looked around and up quickly.

Alixe! He realized it as she caught his pale eyes fixed on her, and she stared, sprang to her feet, still staring. Then into her eyes leaped terror, the living horror of recognition distorting her face. And as she saw he meant to speak she recoiled, shrinking away, turning in her fright like a hunted thing. The strange doll in her hand glittered. It was a revolver wrapped in a red rag.

"W-what's the matter?" he stammered, stepping forward, fearful of the weapon she clutched.



At the sound of his voice she screamed.

But at the sound of his voice she screamed, crept back closer against the wall, screamed again, pushing the shining muzzle of the weapon deep into her fur jacket above her breast.

"F-for God's sake," he gasped, "don't fire—don't"—

She closed both eyes and pulled the trigger. Something knocked her flat against the wall, but she heard no sound of a report, and she pulled the trigger again and felt another blow.

The second blow must have knocked her down, for she found herself rising to her knees, reaching for the table to aid her. But her hand was all red and slippery. She looked at it stupidly, fell forward, rose again, with the acrid smell of smoke choking her and her pretty fur jacket all soaked with the warm, wet stuff which now stained both hands.

Then she got to her knees once more, groped in the rushing darkness and swayed forward, falling loosely and flat. And this time she did not try to rise.

It was her way. It had always been her way out of trouble—the quickest, easiest escape from what she did not choose to endure.

As for the man, they finally contrived to drag the dog from him and lift him to the couch, where he lay twitching among the dolls for awhile, then stopped twitching.

Later in the night men came with lanterns, who carried him away. A doctor said that there was the usual chance for partial recovery. But it was the last excitement he could ever venture to indulge in.

Chapter 29

NINE days is the period of time allotted the human mind in which to wonder at anything. In New York the limit is much less. No tragedy can hold the boards as long as that where the bill must be renewed three times a day to hold even the passing attention of those who themselves are eternal understudies in the continuous metropolitan performance.

As for Selwyn, a few people noticed his presence at the funeral. But even that episode was forgotten before he left the city six hours later under an invitation from Washington which admitted of no delay on the score of private business or of personal perplexity, for the summons was peremptory and his obedience so immediate that a telegram to Austin comprised and concluded the entire ceremony of his leave taking.

Later he wrote a great many letters to Eileen Erroll, not one of which he ever sent. But the formality of his silence was no mystery to her, and her response was silence as profound as the stillness in her soul. But deep into her young heart something new had been born.

• • • • • • •

In April the armored ships left the southern drill ground and began to move northward. A destroyer took Selwyn across to the great fortress inside the Virginia capes and left him there. During his stay there was almost constant firing. Later he continued northward as far as Washington, but it was not until June that he telegraphed Austin:

Government satisfied. Appropriation certain next session. Am on my way to New York.

Austin, in his house, which was now dismantled for the summer, telephoned Nina at Silverside that he had been detained and might not be able to grace the festivities which were to consist of a neighborhood dinner to the younger set in honor of Mrs. Gerald. But he said nothing about Selwyn, and Nina did not suspect that her brother's arrival in New York had anything to do with Austin's detention.

As Selwyn came leisurely up the front steps Austin, awaiting him feverishly, hastened to smooth the florid jocose mask over his features and walked into the room, big hand extended, large, bantering voice undisturbed by the tremor of a welcome which filled his heart and came near filling his eyes:

"So you've stuck the poor old government at last, have you? Took 'em all in—forts, fleet and the marine cavalry?"

"Sure thing," said Selwyn, laughing in the crushing grasp of the big fist. "How are you, Austin? Everybody's in the country, I suppose," glancing around at the linen shrouded furniture. "How is Nina? And the kids? Good business? And Eileen?"

"She's all right," said Austin. "Gad! She's really a superb specimen this summer. Where's your luggage? Oh, is it all here? Enough, I mean, for us to catch a train for Silverside this afternoon?"

"Has Nina any room for me?" asked Selwyn.

"Room! Certainly! I didn't tell her you were coming, because if you hadn't the kids would have been horribly disappointed. She and Eileen are giving a shindy for Gladys—that's Gerald's new acquisition, you know. So if you don't mind butting into a baby show we'll run down. It's only the younger bunch from Hitherwood House and Brookminster. What do you say, Phil?"

Selwyn said that he would go, hesitating before consenting. A curious feeling of age and grayness had suddenly come over him, a hint of fatigue, of consciousness that much of life lay behind him.

So Austin went to the telephone and called up his house at Silverside, saying that he'd be down that evening with a guest.

Nina got the message just as she had arranged her tables, but woman is born to sorrow and heiress to all the unlooked for idiocies of man.

"Dear," she said to Eileen, the tears of uxorial vexation drying unshed in her pretty eyes, "Austin has thought fit to seize upon this moment to bring a man down to dinner. So if you are dressed would you kindly see that the tables are rearranged and then telephone somebody to fill in—two girls, you know? The oldest Craig girl might do for one. Beg her mother to let her come."

"Whom is Austin bringing?" Eileen asked.

"He didn't say. Can't you think of a second girl to get? Isn't it vexing! Of course there's nobody left—nobody ever fills in in the country. Do you know, I'll be driven into letting Drina sit up with us—for sheer lack of material. I suppose the little imp will have a fit if I suggest it and probably perish of indigestion tomorrow."

Eileen laughed. "Oh, Nina, do let Drina come this once! It can't hurt her."

And so it happened that, among the jolly throng which clustered around the little candle lighted tables in the dining room at Silverside, Drina, in ecstasy, curly hair just above the nape of her slim white neck and cheeks like pink fire, sat between Boots and a vacant chair reserved for her tardy father.

For Nina had waited as long as she dared. Then Boots had been summoned to take in Drina and the youthful Craig girl, and, as there were to have been six at a table, at that particular table sat Boots decorously facing Eileen, with the two children on either hand and two empty chairs flanking Eileen.

At dinner Drina and the younger Craig maiden also appeared to be bent upon self destruction, and Boots' eyes opened wider and wider in sheer amazement at the capacity of woman in embryo for rations sufficient to maintain a small garrison.

"There'll be a couple of reports," he said to himself, with a shudder, "like Selwyn's chaosite, and then there'll be no more Drina and Daisy. Hello!" He broke off, astonished. "Well, upon my word of words! Phil Selwyn, or I'm a broker!"

"Phil!" exclaimed Nina. "Oh, Austin, and you never told us!"

"Train was late, as usual," observed Austin. "Philip and I don't mean to butt into this very grand function—Hello, Gerald! Hello, Gladys! Where's our obscure corner below the salt, Nina? Oh, over there!"

THE SANCI DIAMOND.

Its Course Since the Time Queen Elizabeth Bought It.

Elizabeth of England purchased the famous Sanci diamond when De Sanci, extravagant and splendid, was low in purse. When Charles became king and sent Buckingham to Paris to bring back his bride, Henrietta, the messenger wore the Sanci. Charles quarreled with his queen, Henrietta, and with his parliament and not long afterward Cromwell asked for his head. Henrietta gave the diamond to the Earl of Worcester. Worcester probably gave it back to the Stuarts, for whom he ruined himself, for it descended to James II. James' disastrous reign cost him the crown, but he kept the Sanci. That and other jewels which he took away with him supported various Stuart pretenders. This particular one was sold to Louis XIV. of France for $125,000.

Stolen with other jewels in 1792, the Sanci disappeared for thirty-six years. A jeweler came by it, and Prince Demidoff purchased it for his wife. Twenty years later she let it go to Jamsetjee Jeejeeboy, a rich merchant of Bombay. Again it appeared at a Paris jeweler's shop and was sold to the maharajah of Puttiala. He, too, came upon hard times. It was from a London jeweler that William Waldorf Astor bought it for his son's bride.—Franklin Clarkin in Everybody's Magazine.

THE SPIDER.

It Differs From an Insect In Five Main Particulars.

The spider is not an insect, though probably nine people out of ten would class it under this term. With scorpions and mites spiders form a class in the animal kingdom known as arachnida. This name is derived from a mythical personage called Arachne, the daughter of a purple dyer of Lydia, who was fabled to have challenged Minerva to a trial of skill in spinning. So indignant was the goddess at this act of boldness that she forthwith transformed the hapless challenger into a spider, presumably in order that she might have the best possible opportunity of practicing the art on which she prided herself so much.

Spiders differ from insects in five main particulars. Their eyes are simple instead of compound, they have eight legs in place of six, they do not pass through the metamorphoses which are characteristic of insects, they have no antennae and their breathing is accomplished by means of organs which combine the functions of lungs and gills instead of by tubes pervading their bodies. These points of distinction are sufficient to determine the fact that it is impossible to class spiders as insects.

The "Picket."

The picket was generally inflicted on cavalry and artillery men and was a singularly brutal bit of torture. A long post, near which stood a stool, was driven into the ground. The delinquent was ordered to mount the stool, and his right hand was fastened to a hook in the post by a noose, drawn up as high as it could be stretched, round his wrist. A stump the height of the stool, with its end cut to a round and blunt point, was also driven into the earth close to the post. Then the stool was taken away, and the sufferer had nothing to rest his bare feet upon but the stump, "which, though it did not usually break the skin," says Captain Grose, "put him in great torture, his only means of relief being by resting his weight on his wrist, the pain of which soon became intolerable." One can very well believe him, especially when he makes the addition that a man was not infrequently left to stand in this position for half an hour, although the orthodox period of endurance was fifteen minutes.—London Graphic.

Seizing the Opportunity.

Doctor—You have no reason to believe, madam, that your husband shot himself intentionally?

Madam—Oh, dear, no! It was purely accidental. But is he seriously hurt?

Doctor—Quite seriously, but I think we can save him.

Madam—What are you going to do now with all those horrid surgical instruments?

Doctor—We are going to probe for the bullet.

Madam—Yes? Well, doctor, while you are about it won't you be good enough to see if you can't find a gold collar button I lent him last week and that he carelessly swallowed?

Athletic Exercises.

Flattered Restaurant Keeper—I'm glad to hear, sir, that you've been growing so strong since you began coming to my restaurant. Fullett—Well, it's a fact. You see, my habits are sedentary, and I can't afford to enter a gymnasium. Yes, sir, your steaks and roast fowls are making a new man of me.

Making Sure of the Architect.

Norman-Al-Oouar, an Arabian king who reigned long, long ago at Hirah, commanded the architect Sennemar to build him a wondrous palace. This the architect did and when it was done a single stone fastened the whole structure, and the colors of the walls changed frequently during the day. The king was greatly pleased and showered all kinds of rich gifts upon the builder with the lavishness of oriental kings. But monarchs were treacherous in those old days, and it occurred to the king that Sennemar might build a palace equal in beauty or even superior for some rival ruler. The more he thought over it the more jealous he became until one day he ordered the architect to be thrown from the top of the palace to make certain that no duplicate palace would be made. After this the king was satisfied that his palace was the only one, and the Arabians regarded it as one of the wonders of the world.

AN IMPROMPTU WEDDING.

The Message That Was Read After the Ceremony Was Over.

By HOPE DARING.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

An automobile stopped before Los Olivos, the country home of the Hunters. Mrs. Joyce Hunter rose and went out on the veranda to meet the young couple who were ascending the steps.

"Did you enjoy your ride, Carol, sweetheart?"

"Oh, it was divine! Paradise can be no fairer than San Gabriel valley in early April. The fragrance of the orange groves is overpowering, and their fences are wreathed with roses. Why, I never dreamed there were so many roses in all the world! The mesa is a flame of red-gold poppies, the rosy mist of the apricot orchard slopes up to the gray green of the olive wood and Joyce, what is it?"

"What is it, Joyce?" repeated Ronald Strang, Carol's companion.

"It is not the poetry our dear little brown eyed maid has been talking. Carol, there is a telegram from your Uncle James."

SHE TORE OPEN THE ENVEL[illegible] AND READ ALOUD.

"A telegram!" cried both Carol and Roland in one breath.

"A telegram, my children. I know it is from him, as he sent one to Harry, asking that if you were absent from Los Olives it might be forwarded to you. He must have sent it as soon as he received the letters telling of your engagement."

Carol sank down upon one of the porch chairs. Her fingers trembled as they unwound the mass of chiffon in which her head and neck had been swathed.

"No, Joyce," she cried, as her hostess turned away. "There is no use bringing the message. I know that it forbids my marriage to Ronald, so I will not read it."

Ronald Strang straightened his broad shoulders. "Let us read the thing and have it over with. What if he does withhold his consent? Carol, surely you will not give me up at the command of an uncle and a guardian?"

The girl threw out her hands with a despairing gesture. "When papa was dying I promised him that I would never disobey Uncle James."

"The old tyrant! What reason can he give for refusing us his blessing? I know I am not worthy of you. No man is. I am a decent sort as men go I love you to distraction, and I've plenty of money to give you everything you want."

"You don't know Uncle James. For one thing he will say you are a Californian. Then I have known you only since my arrival here to visit Joyce, two months ago. He will declare that I am too young and silly. There is no use talking, Ronald, if I ever marry you it must be before I read the telegram."

There was a moment's silence. The mind of each one of the trio was grappling with the same question. It was Ronald who spoke first.

"You blessed archangel! Do you mean tomorrow? You will never regret it, Carol."

"Tomorrow!" and Joyce Hunter threw back her head. "Tomorrow may be too late. The dragon uncle may arrive before then. It must be tonight. Here comes Harry, my own 'liege lord and master born,' and he is the best hand at arrangements."

Carol began to sob. "Yes, I love you, Ronald, but I—I want a wedding. It may be my only chance."

"You precious lamb!" Mrs. Hunter smoothed Carol's disordered sunny hair with one hand while she beckoned to her husband with the other. "You shall have a wedding, a full grown one. Let me see. It is 3 o'clock, and we can't have the wedding later than 9. Six hours is rather a short time, but things grow rapidly in California. And that telegram shall not be read until the wedding is over."

That was a busy afternoon not only for the inmates of [illegible] ives, but also for all who lived in [illegible] other half dozen country houses [illegible] by. Telephones and automobiles were pressed into service. Joyce asked her neighbors to give her their flowers and their time, to lend her their servants, the contents of their refrigerators and any other thing that they might have which could be utilized for a wedding.

The call was met gladly. It was not only that the colony had many things in common, but the merry little eastern girl had won all hearts. It would be delightful to have her safely married to one of their number.

"Pray don't ask me to waste my breath telling you why," Joyce gasped. "Explanation will come in due time. A little lower, Carrie, please. Now, Maurice, remember that you are to run into Los Angeles and bring out the Rev. Alexander Hunt, who is to perform the ceremony; ten yards of No. 7 white satin ribbon, a corkscrew and a freezer full of ice cream."

The arrangements were completed. Just as the clock in the hall struck 9 some one struck up a wedding march, and the bridal couple descended the stairs. The front parlor was a bower of white, golden centered Cherokee roses. Long sprays of them made an arch on that side of the room where the clergyman stood waiting, and the carpet was strewn with snowy petals for Carol's white satin slippers to tread upon.

The bride was arrayed in a dainty white frock that had come home from the dressmaker only the day before. She wore her mother's pearls on her neck and arms, orange blossoms in her belt and Mrs. Lankard's wedding veil. The girl's face was pale, but her eyes were clear and steady. The young couple had no attendants. Harry gave the bride away, and Joyce hovered near, satisfaction and anxiety furiously blended upon his face.

As soon as congratulations were over the wedding dinner was served. The menu was not along the conventional lines of wedding dinners, but its excellency was surprising to the masculine part of the co[illegible]

"Indeed it is. Was it not fo[illegible] that both Carrie and I planned to have fruit salad for dinner tonight?"

The dinner was hurried a little as the newly wedded pair were to motor into town. That would enable them to take a boat the next morning for Santa Catalina island, where their honeymoon was to be spent. While Carol and Ronald were upstairs changing their clothes the Hunters told the story of the telegram.

"Here, Carol! You must read your uncle's message before you start; you really must, dear," Joy[illegible] as the bride descended the stairs, arrayed in her navy blue traveling suit.

"Very well. Nothing matters now." Carol said with a fond look at Rona[illegible]

She tore open the envelope and read aloud:

THE TAX ON SALT.

One of the Things That Started the French Revolution.

Before the French revolution the government established warehouses at which the inhabitants were compelled to purchase their stores of salt. These warehouses were numerous in some provinces and few in others; but, whether sufficient or insufficient for the needs of the population, they were often situated at a considerable distance from the towns and villages, whose inhabitants had to trudge miles along bad roads to buy their salt.

But this was not all. It was prescribed by law that the head of every family must lay in his stock of salt not at such times as might suit his own convenience, but on one stated day in the year. Should he fail in this observance he was fined, and he was also fined if he purchased a smaller quantity than the law prescribed.

His hardships did not stop even there. On making his annual purchase he had to state the different purposes for which he intended to use the salt during the ensuing year, and in the event of his being discovered salting his soup instead of his pork according to his statement or his pork instead of his soup on the day he had named he was also liable to a fine. His kitchen was never secure from the intrusion of the inspecting officer, and woe to the housewife who was detected in any petty infraction of this law.

WONDERFUL ROCK GARDEN.

Englishman Has a Three Acre Reproduction of the Matterhorn.

The largest rock garden in England is that of Sir Frank Crisp at Friar Park, Henley. It is a faithful reproduction of the Matterhorn on a scale of about three acres. Seven thousand tons of limestone were brought from Yorkshire to make it.

The snow capped peak is represented by quartz. Below it are thousands upon thousands of alpine flowers growing in pockets between the rocks and filling every chink in the trails that ascend the mountain. There must be 200 different species in bloom at once.

At the base of the mountain, says Country Life in America, is a miniature Swiss chalet, where one may sit and enjoy the scene, comparing all the main features with a little bronze mod[illegible] which Sir Frank [illegible] the entertainment of [illegible] brook courses down the [illegible] side, and just before it [illegible] the chalet it forms a pretty [illegible] and then spreads out at your feet [illegible] a miniature lake decorated with pygmy water lilies and richly margined with pinks, primroses, gentians and other alpine flowers.

A Good Laugh Is Good For the [illegible]

Look at the laugh in whosoever light you will, wheth[illegible] see it as the deliver[illegible] the bondage to outgr[illegible]; a schoolmaster with th[illegible] switch of ridicule to teach us manners; an apostle of democracy, proclaiming that we are all of the same clay, made of it and to return to it, but every lump of it holding some sparkle of the divine fire, and woe betide the man that tries to make us think that he is of different stuff! Look at the laugh, I say, in any light you choose, and you will see that it is not so much the downfall and confusion of the laughed at that makes us happy, that joggles our waistbands and sends the ha-ha spouting out, that pumps the blood along the sluggish veins, massaging the interior works and replacing the shopworn stock of air with a new consignment, as it is the sudden, sharp, intense realization of our personal well being.—Eugene Wood in Success Magazine.

Answer This Question

When a remedy has lived for over thirty years, steadily growing in popularity and influence, and thousands upon thousands of women declare they owe there very lives to it, is it not reasonable to believe that it is an article of great merit?

We challenge the world to show any other one remedy for a special class of disease which has attained such an enormous demand and maintained it for so many years as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, the famous woman's remedy for woman's ills. Unless it [illegible] very good medicine and the claims made for it are honest [illegible] a record would have been impossible — fraud or misrepresentations would long ago have been detected and the business gone into oblivion. Read this unsolicited letter:—

Dovedale, Sask.—"I was a sufferer from female weakness—monthly periods irregular and painful and a bad discharge, backache and wretched headache, and had felt weak ever since the birth of my twins. I tried doctors but got no relief. I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after three weeks I was feeling much better, and now I am well again."—Mrs. Bessie Bily, Dovedale, Sask., Canada.

When a woman lik[illegible] is generous enough to write such a lette[illegible] for publication, she should at least be given credit for a sincere desire to help other suffering women. For we assure you there is no other reason why she should court such publi[illegible]

We say it in all sincerity and friendship—try this medicine.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

LURE OF THE COLONIAL

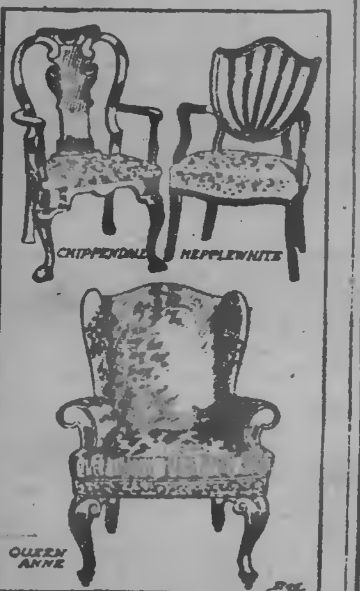
Better Taste to Be Found In Modern Furniture.

OLD ENGLISH DESIGNS USED.

New Adaptations to Twentieth Century Taste and Needs, but Centuries Old In Its Conception and Development—Chippendale In High Favor.

The day of flamboyant, overdecorated furniture has passed. In its stead has come an era with artistic possibilities that bring delight to the soul of the man or woman who appreciates beauty of line and harmony of coloring and decoration. If you do not believe that this desirable change has been effected, ask the furniture man and listen to him enthuse about conditions and the outlook in his line of business.

"Look at the furniture we are displaying these days and compare it with the styles of ten, eight or even five years ago," he says. "Can you believe that the same class of people are the buyers of both? It seems strange, but it is true. For everyday use and for ordinary people with moderate incomes we are selling today furniture that a decade ago could be obtained only after a long and tedious hunt in the high priced specialty shops of the big cities. Of course it has always been possible for the initiated to get good furniture—and by that I mean good from the viewpoint of art—but the figures were prohibitive. And many whose taste revolted against the elaboration and ugly lines of much of the furniture of the past were obliged to take it because their purses would not permit them to buy anything better and their homes had to be furnished. Today there is no excuse for an inartistic piece of furniture in any household except the desire of the householder for articles of that kind. Doesn't this new style furniture cost more than inartistic productions of old? Yes, but so does everything else that contributes to our present day existence—food, clothing, building materials, etc. Compared with its value, however, it is worth twice as much as the styles which it has superseded."



The new furniture is new in its adaptation to twentieth century taste and needs, but centuries old in its conception and development. Chippendale, Sheraton, Hepplewhite, Elizabethan and Queen Anne are the styles principally which have been reproduced and modified for present day use. Mahogany, walnut and oak are the woods most in evidence, and they are manipulated with the skill and art that make it a matter of study to detect the difference between the furniture of yesterday and today. The strength, lightness and grace that distinguish the furniture produced by Sheraton and that in a degree are characteristic of the work of his companion designers of the eighteenth century, Chippendale and Hepplewhite, are as observable in the productions as in the originals. And as mahogany is the wood in which they are making their appearance they have been accorded a high degree of favor. Mahogany is never out of fashion, but for the past few years it has been steadily regaining the prestige that it enjoyed in the "grand old colonial days" that the poet tells about, and those who possess mahogany furniture now prize it at its true worth.

A Delicious Dessert.

For hot summer days there is a dainty dessert which the clever housewife may readily prepare.

The foundation is angel food cake cut in slices, which are in turn cut round with a cake cutter. Between two layers of the cake put shredded pineapple and sirup. Heap the top with whipped cream or vanilla ice cream, garnish with candied cherries and serve.

To make in shortcake fashion split the cake through, put the pineapple between top and bottom layers and cover with whipped cream over which has been sprinkled chopped nut meats.

At the 5 o'Clock Tea.

A popular combination much served instead of iced tea at 5 o'clock is grape juice and ginger ale mixed. Use about a third of the latter. If white grape juice instead of purple is chosen the punch is better yet. Serve with glasses half filled with cracked ice.

Important to Ladies

It is not often an opportunity occurs at your door to see the latest Parisian and New York styles in hair goods, yet such is the case, as Prof. Dorenwend, of Toronto, is visiting this town, and invites your inspection of these goods at his private apartments at the hotel.

These hair goods styles, when properly adjusted, protect and ornament the head, soften and beautify the expression of the face, and consequently tone up an aged appearance. Be sure and see them at the Oriental Hotel on Friday, October 22nd.

CAN YOU COOK A POTATO?

Uncommon Ways of Using This Always Popular Vegetable.

We all know how to cook the dish of plain boiled or steamed potatoes, of which we tire sometimes, but to which we always return. But many excellent dishes can be made with potatoes, and most of the recipes given here can be made with old or new potatoes:

Potato Croquettes.—Boil six large potatoes, rub them through a sieve or beat them up with two forks. Work in while hot a tablespoonful of butter, half a cupful of hot milk, seasoning of salt, pepper and paprika. Beat in two eggs, then turn out on to a dish and allow to get cold. Make the mixture into neat croquettes, using little flour, then roll in beaten egg and fine bread crumbs; fry in plenty of smoking hot fat. Drain and serve hot.

Potatoes and Eggs.—Boil some large potatoes in their skins. Peel and cut in thick slices. Scald one cupful of cream, lay the potatoes in a fireproof dish, season with salt, pepper and grated nutmeg. Pour on the cream, add two or three small pieces of butter and bake till thoroughly hot. Serve with some neatly trimmed poached eggs on the top.

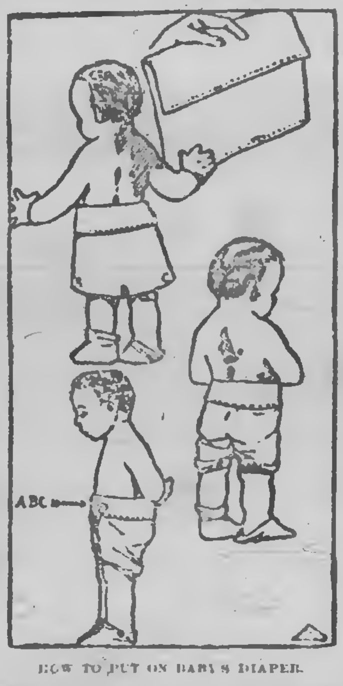
Baked Souffle Potatoes.—Wash well and bake in a slow oven six large potatoes. When ready, cut carefully in halves, scoop out the centers and rub through a sieve. Weight two ounces. Boil one tablespoonful of milk and half an ounce of butter, add the potato and beat well. Next add the yolks of two eggs, salt and pepper to taste, then beat up the whites of the eggs and mix them in gently. Partly fill the skins, bake them till light brown and puffed up well, then serve quickly, as everything "souffle" falls as it cools.

Potato Pudding.—Rub half a pound of mashed potatoes through a sieve, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar, rind and strained juice of half a lemon, one heaping tablespoonful of butter, two yolks of eggs, three beaten whites of eggs and three tablespoonfuls of milk. Mix and pour into a deep fireproof dish and bake till well risen.

A HINT FOR MOTHERS.

Physician Shows New Manner of Putting on Baby's Diaper.

Baby was ailing, and the old family doctor was called in to diagnose the case. He looked Master Babykins over carefully, then took off his glasses and said, with a twinkle in his eye: "Nothing wrong with your baby but a cold stomach. You should always keep the baby's stomach warm. It must be protected at all times of the year."



HOW TO PUT ON BABY'S DIAPER.

He picked up a diaper which was folded over in the old way, cornerwise, and continued: "Now, this diaper, for instance, may be utilized for this purpose. Don't fold it cornerwise. Turn over a straight end in a fold about seven or eight inches wide, pin this tightly about the baby's stomach, then draw up the corner and middle of the opposite side between the little legs, and pin again so." And he gave a practical illustration of his way to protect the little fellow's abdomen.

This hint will be appreciated by all mothers, and they'll wonder why they didn't think of it long ago.

Prize Animals.

A splendid prize for a juvenile party is a box of imported cardboard toys in animal shapes. The figures are especially lifelike and durable in the way of playthings and are furnished with joints, the method of which is patented. Six animals come in each set. Some of the boxes contain wild creatures, some our familiar friends of house or barn. On the back of each shape is printed a description in easy English of the animal's habitat and habits. Thanks to the jointing, the creatures can be made to assume diverse and very characteristic attitudes.

Instead of Casters.

The housekeeper who has had trouble with the casters that tear her carpets or scratch her hardwood floors perhaps has not learned that there is now a substitute made of glass that will neither scratch the finest wood nor tear the most fragile matting.

A sliding shoe or cup made of glass with a flat surface and without angles is provided with a brass cup and a shank that fits into any piece of furniture which will hold an old fashioned caster. This can be had either for wooden furniture or for brass and iron beds.

Given Up To Die

No. 100 George St., Sorel, Quebec.

"I suffered from womb disease for seven years, with dreadful pains over the front of the body, over the back and down the legs. I had indigestion and chronic constipation and the constipation was so bad that I went sometimes for ten to fifteen days without any action of the bowels. I was ill in bed for one whole year. At one time I was so low that everyone thought I was going to die, and the last Rites of the Church were administered to me. I was treated by six different doctors without any benefit.

MADAME JOSEPH LIRETTE

Then I got a sample of "Fruit-a-tives," but I had no faith in them at all, and I would not have taken them only my husband begged so hard for me to try them. As soon as I began to take "Fruit-a-tives" I grew better, the bloating was relieved, the sleeplessness was cured, my stomach acted, and the bowels were moved, but above all the fearful womb pains were made easier.

I have taken eighteen boxes in all and I am now perfectly well again."

Harlem In New York.

In an early charter of what is now New York occurs the name of Lancaster. That is what Harlem used to be called. It comprised the territory on Manhattan island north of a line drawn from the foot of East Seventy-fourth street to the foot of Manhattan street. The real Harlem village was a settlement collected within a radius of a quarter of a mile from One Hundred and Twenty-fourth street and Third avenue. Today the name Harlem is applied to the whole territory north of One Hundred and Tenth street, east and west. After the name Lancaster was eliminated the village was called Nieuw Haarlaem.—New York Press.

WEDDING BELLS

BIANCO—SABATINO

St. Paul's Roman Catholic church was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Tuesday morning last when Miss Concetta, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donato Sabatino, was united in marriage to Mr. Pasquale Bianco. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father Phelan, the church being filled with the friends and relatives of the contracting party. The bride, who entered the church to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march played by Miss Alice Kennedy, was attired in a handsome costume of cream silk trimmed with pearls and wore the customary veil. The bridesmaid, Miss Lucy Minneco, of Peterborough, cousin of the bride, wore a costume of creme crepe de chene. Mr. Domenico Sabatino, brother of the bride acted as groomsman. After the ceremony the bridal party repaired to the home of the bride's parents, where the bride and groom received the congratulations of the assembled guests, and a sumptuous wedding repast was served. The bride was the recipient of a large number of handsome and valuable presents. The happy couple left for a trip to Bangor, Pa., and on their return will take up their residence in the village.—Lakefield News.

Mgr. Proulx of Nicolet, Quebec, Passes Away in Rome — Only Arrived There Last Week

Rome, Oct. 18.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Mgr Proulx of Nicolet, Que., who arrived here last week to celebrate his sacredotal jubilee at St. Peter's, and was stopping at the Canadian College, was taken suddenly ill with intestinal trouble. He was conveyed to the hospital of the English Blue Nuns, where he died after the Pope had sent him his benediction.

Spent Life In Nicolet.

Montreal, Oct. 18.—Mgr. Moyese George Proulx, vicar-general of the diocese of Nicolet, was born in the Town of Nicolet in 1839, and ordained a priest in 1859. He was for many years professor at Nicolet College, and was appointed superior in 1892. He never left the diocese in which he was born. He visited the Holy Land in 1872, and his letters to La Minerva are still talked about in journalistic circles. Not many years ago, too, a correspondent for a Toronto paper was at Nicolet reporting the speeches of several Ministers of the Crown. Two columns had to be wired, but the young lady at the office was inexperienced and broke down under the task. Hearing of the affair, Abbe Proulx came over from the college, and, being an expert operator, sat down at the key and flashed the "copy."

ROYALTY TO VISIT PARIS

Paris, Oct. 18.—Paris society is looking forward to a highly interesting season. No less than three kings will visit the French capital during the winter.

King Edward of England probably will be the first of the crowned heads to arrive. As on former occasions, he will be in Paris simply as the Duke of Lancaster. King Edward always patronizes the latest plays

Towards the end of next month the young King Manuel of Portugal is expected.

Another monarch who is to make his first official visit to Paris, is Peter I. of Servia, probably in January. He will first pay a visit to the Czar of Russia.

King Leopold is now in Paris, but his visits are so frequent as to be no longer remarked here.

DEATH OF FERRER STRONGLY RESENTED

London Mob Marches Against Spanish Embassy—Mass Meeting in Trafalgar Square is Addressed by Laborites and Socialists.

London, Oct. 18.—The red flag was raised in London yesterday afternoon and a large mob moved upon the Spanish embassy to make a demonstration of its disapproval of the execution of Prof. Francisco Ferrer, the convicted revolutionist, at Barcelona, a few days ago.

Several bodies of police were stationed at the approaches to the embassy and they drove off the crowds in their usual bloodless effectual way. The groans and hootings were plainly heard in the embassy and at Buckingham Palace.

The trouble began with a mass meeting in Trafalgar square, which was organized by several Socialist and Labor bodies. Several hundred members of these organizations marched to the square carrying red flags draped with crepe and bearing inscriptions denouncing King Alfonso. A black bordered banner was raised against the Nelson column with big letters that could be read from afar: "To hell with the murderer, Alfonso."

After J. F. Green, secretary of the Friends of Russian Freedom, called the meeting to order, he read a telegram from the Countess of Warwick: "No words are too strong to express Europe's horror at the murder of Ferrar."

Several Laborite members of Parliament delivered strong orations. Victor Grayson of Manchester, the Socialist member, capped the climax by declaring that if the head of every king of Europe was torn from his body, it would not pay half the price of Ferrer's life. He called the Russian Emperor a "dirty monster," and said that King Edward, "who could have prevented the execution," was responsible for whatever might happen in England as a result of it. He demanded the expulsion of the Spanish ambassador.

The Socialist societies carrying their banners then marched in good order to the Spanish embassy, singing revolutionary songs and hooting King Alfonso. A great rabble accompanied them, filling the streets

It was dark when they reached the open square in front of the embassy and they found that the square was filled with platoons of police. The embassy windows were dark and there were no sign of life there. The police would not let the procession enter the square, or even stop. The crowds were turned back and kept moving up Victoria street toward the Parliament buildings, singing, shouting and groaning.

From many towns throughout the country come reports of momentary demonstrations, the passing of resolutions and the organizing of mass meetings in protest against the Spanish Government's action in executing Ferrer.

A prominent labor member of Parliament Saturday made it his business to enquire whether the Secretary for Foreign Affairs had made any protest to Spain in the matter. It is understood that if nothing has been done when Parliament reassembles next week a strong memorandum will be placed on the table, supported by nearly all the Labor, Socialist and Radical members, censuring the Foreign Minister, Sir Edward Grey.

The General Federation of Trades Unions of Great Britain has passed a resolution deploring the outrage.

Ferrer Buried In Ditch.

Barcelona, Oct. 18.—The relatives of Senor Ferrer were permitted to follow the body to the grave. It lay in an open coffin, according to the Spanish custom. Bullet holes were visible in the forehead. The authorities refused to permit interment to be made in a private grave, and buried the body in a common ditch. Permission was granted the family to mark the spot with a stake.

DID NOT LIKE SNIPE HUNTING

Columbia, Mo., Oct. 18.—Hazing at the University of Missouri reached its climax on Wednesday night, when a crowd of boys and girls took Miss Leota Crider of Kansas City, a freshman in the College of Arts and Science, "snipe hunting." Miss Crider is now at the home of her father, S. P. Crider, a stock commission man in Kansas City. She departed for Kansas City soon after she was hazed.

Miss Crider was reared in the city and knows little of bird hunting. When "snipe hunting" was proposed she readily consented to hold the sack. The jokers say they never went far from Miss Crider, but she believed she was left alone and called several times. At last they returned and brought her home. She has left school for a few days to recover from the shock.

AUTO ACCIDENT PROVED FATAL

Tuxedo Park, N.Y., Oct. 18.—Mrs. Bruce Price, resident of Tuxedo Park, and widow of a New York architect, was killed in an automobile accident yesterday afternoon on the road from Tuxedo to Arden.

The car was going north on the main road of the Harriman estate near Arden station, when the chauffeur pulled out to one side to pass a car ahead. The machine skidded into the brush on the side of the road, throwing Mrs. Price against a tree, killing her almost instantly.

WOOD PULP DUTY FELL

Washington, Oct. 18.—Wood pulp, mechanically ground, imported into the United States from anywhere in Canada except Quebec and Ontario provinces, is free of duty until otherwise directed, according to a decision by the United States Treasury Department.

If produced from pulp wood cut on private lands in Quebec and Ontario, it is admissible free of duty.

But if produced from pulpwood cut on crown lands in either Quebec or Ontario, it is assessable at one-twelfth of one cent per pound, and in the case of Quebec, there is added a countervailing duty of 25 cents per cord as the equivalent of the export tax.

WAS AWARDED BIG DAMAGES

Toronto, Oct. 18.—William Fitchet was awarded $1,500 damages and costs against J. M. Walton of Aurora, for wrongful and malicious arrest by the jury in the Assize Court Saturday morning. Fitchet claimed he was kept in prison for 17 days because of a declaration made by Walton that he (Frichet) was going to leave the province to defraud his creditors. At the time Frichet was said to have $1,271 in Walton's keeping, realized from the sale of the plaintiff's goods in stock.

In the witness box plaintiff swore he had no intention of leaving the province. The defendant is a banker at Aurora.

J. M. BARRIE MAKES CANNAN WED WIFE

London, Eng., Oct. 18.—J. M. Barrie, novelist and playwright, did not enter suit for divorce, it is now asserted by his friends, until Gilbert Cannan, whom he named as co-respondent, took a solemn pledge to marry Mrs. Barrie after a decree should be granted.

Moreover, as Cannan is not well provided with money, Barrie made a handsome settlement on his wife before he filed his petition for separation, making her financially independent.

Throughout the whole affair Barrie acted with the greatest generosity, although he was grievously afflicted.

GREEK PRINCES HAVE BEEN OUSTED

Athens, Oct. 18.—Premier Mavromichalis having announced the desire of the royal princes to have the bills relating to their services in the army adopted, the Chamber of Deputies, without discussion voted the bills abolishing the right of the crown prince to hold the post of commander in chief and of the other princes to hold military commands.

The adoption of the military reform bills veils another step in the military revolution which yet may involve the abdication of King George. It is understood that His Majesty feels acutely his abandonment by the great powers in the matter of Greece's aspirations for the annexation of Crete and has seriously considered the possibility of being compelled to abdicate as an outcome of the disappointment of his people.

WELL IS CAUSE OF AN EPIDEMIC

Wingham, Oct. 18.—It is believed the epidemic of typhoid fever that has been raging here for some days has been checked, and thirteen patients who are at present ill with the disease are all reported to be progressing favorably.

Two deaths have occurred during the week, and for a time some of the other patients were in a very critical state. The whole trouble seems to have originated in a contaminated well.

ST. JOHN WILL GET THE DOCKS

London, Oct. 18.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—It is definitely stated here that the site for dry docks and repairing sheds capable of dealing with the largest liners and warships, by Harland & Wolff, will be at St. John, N.B. The firm's intention is to equip and maintain a repairing establishment equal to that of Belfast. At the outset about $1,000,000 will be expended in acquiring land and constructing the necessary works, but this does not represent all the expenditure in contemplation.

DR. COOK WILL REPEAT CLIMB

New York, Oct. 18.—Having failed in his efforts to get Prof. Hershel C. Parker and Anthony Fiala to conduct an expedition to ascend Mount McKinley, Dr. Fred A. Cook, announces that he will abandon his lecture tour as soon as possible and himself head an expedition to ascend the mountain to obtain, if possible, the records which he left there in 1906.

THOUSANDS WERE AT COMMUNION

Huge Gathering Attends Sacrament in Forbes Field at Pittsburg

Pittsburg, Oct. 18.—Thirty-five thousand persons, representing practically every Protestant religion in the world, yesterday partook of an open air communion at Forbes' Field, the million-dollar baseball park here.

The service was the crowning effort of the promoters of the Centenary convention of the Disciples of Christ. Starting 100 years ago, with less than 100 persons, in an effort to bring all Christians into one great denomination, the immense gathering yesterday really represented two million persons, a great number of them Canadians and not a few from Toronto

The services started with the immense gathering singing "Nearer My God to Thee," the 35,000 voices being audible for at least three miles

Five hundred deacons, carrying trays upon which was unfermented grape juice and bread, emblematic of the blood and body of Christ, then passed along the aisles, administering the sacrament to every communicant. The services were conducted under the direction of Rev. Dr. Wallace Thorpe, pastor of the First Christian Church here.

It required about 1,500 loaves of bread and 11 barrels of grape juice to feed and quench the thirst of the multitude.

WEAKNESSES OF THE U. S. ARMY

Washington, Oct. 18.—Treating of practically every branch of the army, the annual report of Inspector-General E. A. Garlington, is devoted to comment on existing conditions, some of which are criticized and others commended.

The belief is expressed that the army is greatly in need of increase in the infantry and field artillery and of reorganization of the cavalry, and the opinion is given that legislation to this end would be facilitated by quartering the troop where they would come closely in contact with the people.

Diplomat Found Dead.

London, Oct. 18.—William I. Buchanan of Buffalo, N.Y., who had been in Europe for some time in connection with an important diplomatic mission for the State Department at Washington, in reference to Venezuelan affairs, was found in an unconscious condition near the embassy yesterday morning and died before medical aid could be rendered. Death was probably due to apoplexy.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ELEVATOR IS DESTROYED AT QUEBEC

One Life is Lost and Million Bushel Grain Elevator is Burned Down Along With 150,000 Bushels of Grain—Sheds, Two Boats and Cars Lost.

Quebec, Oct. 18.—A fire loss estimated at from $1,000,000 to $1,250,000, and the death of one fire-fighter, mark the destruction Saturday night of the million bushel grain elevator owned by the Canadian Northern Railway.

The building was erected a few years ago at a cost of $400,000. It was destroyed together with 150,000 bushels of grain. Also to the flames were two huge freight sheds, well filled with goods; the customs house, three small freight sheds, the plant of the Quebec Cold Storage Co., and a number of loaded freight cars and two small boats.

The fire broke out in the elevator about eight o'clock, and as it was constructed of wood, and of a good height, it soon became a mass of flame, the firemen being quite helpless. The freight sheds of the cold storage plant followed, and then the dome of the custom house, a large stone built edifice, ignited and in a short time the place was in ruins. The records were saved. A stiff west wind fanned the flames and threatened the safety of the C.P.R. steamer Empress of Ireland, which was lying at Neford's wharf in a damaged state, and the steamer was moved across the harbor.

The fatality occurred when Jerome Fortin of the fire department and a C.N.R fireman named Martel fell with a ladder from the second floor of the custom house. They alighted on the stone steps 30 feet below. Fortin was instantly killed, while Martel had both legs and several ribs broken, and sustained other injuries.

The fire was not under control until the early hours of the morning. Only the direction of the wind saved the lower town. The work of the fire department is being severely criticised and an investigation may be held.

EVANGELIZATION MEANS PEACE FOR THE WORLD

Buffalo, Oct. 18.—Amid the wild cheers of 600 of the most prominent men of Buffalo, Rev. J. A. Macdonald of Toronto declared Saturday at the launching of the national campaign of the laymen's missionary movement in this city, that there could be no war among Christian nations while they were combined in the evangelization of the world.

"Canada," he said, "hopes to preserve this example of international good sense. She would not have it otherwise. While linked in the evangelization of the world, we, or no other Christian nation can ever strike hands in war."

"The greatest defence of a nation is not battleships, great navies or great armies. It is Christianity. America must take part in this world-wide movement to evangelize the whole earth. This country tried to live in isolation, to escape the worries and responsibilities of the other great nations, but it could not. I am not an imperialist, either. The nation as well as the individual that lives alone, for itself only, will die. As America could not escape its responsibilities, in its affairs of the world, so the Christian men of the country cannot escape their responsibilities to the heathen."

Organist Dies Suddenly.

London, Oct. 18.—The choir of Colborne street Church waited in their seats yesterday morning and wondered why their organist, A. O. Geiger, did not appear. Later word was brought that he had died suddenly from internal blood poisoning. He was 36 years of age and a most accomplished musician. He lived for many years in Oshawa.

SUICIDE AT THE FALLS CHOSE NOVEL METHOD OF DYING

George Maero, of Milwaukee, Weighing 200 Pounds, Walks Into the Stream at Luna Island and Sitting Down Bumps Along 40 Feet Before Plunging Over the Edge.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Oct. 18.—Within a half hour after he had gone over the American cataract Saturday afternoon, two guides at the Cave of the Winds, Wm. Barnett and George Wright, recovered the body of George Maero or Mavrowcordato, of Milwaukee, a man about 40 years old.

Never before in the history of the river under normal conditions has a body been recovered from the rampart of rocks that front the cataract.

Maero was seen to enter the water from the north shore of Luna Island by Joe Lennox, a hackman, a young bridal couple, fares of his, and Officer Alexander of the reservation force. The man first divested himself of his overcoat, light coat, vest and hat, and then waded into the stream. A man of 200 pounds in weight, Maero did not lose his footing in the current. The water at that point is very shallow. So he sat down in the stream, and then bumping along on the rocky bottom for forty feet, he plunged over the crest into the abyss.

Alexander was on Goat Island, too far away to stop Maero. The bridal couple, horror stricken, watched the man until they saw him borne along in the current and then turned away. Alexander ran to the Cave of the Winds House, and informed Barrett and Wright of the suicide. The guides, donning their oilskins and boots, went down the stairs and along the path, watching the boiling water at the base of the falls.

In less than five minutes Maero's body appeared bobbing on the churning water. By an odd turn of fate it was washed up on a flat rock and held there. Wright and Barrett, with ropes around their waists, clambered down on the rocks and secured the body with difficulty in the blinding spray, carried it to the wooden walk that is built over the rocks. Then it was brought to the top of the bank.

In a pocket was found a letter to the coroner. There was also a copy of a court paper recording the divorce of Mabel Walker Mavrowcordato, bearing date of April 15, 1907. On one of the suicide's fingers was a two-carat diamond ring, and from a chain about his neck hung a locket containing the picture of a pretty young woman.

The body was badly battered in its trip over the cataract.

In the dead man's clothing was found the following letter, addressed to the coroner: "Dear Sir,—Possibly to-morrow you will find me dead, if so, I wish you would forward my ring to my divorced wife, Mabel Walker, care of her father, box 91, Tomale, Wis. As to the rest of my belongings, you can do with them as you deem fit. I think you can realize enough out of my belongings to cremate my body. If you think fit you can give my body to some medical college, to show the evil effects of continued smoking of cigarettes for 40 years. I have no living relatives. You will find papers of identification in my inside pocket."

YEAR IS BAD FOR CHAMPAGNE

Paris, Oct. 18.—There is a prospect that the year 1909 will be one of the worst years experienced in the champagne industry, both in amount of yield and the quality. Rheims agents say that should there be an increase in consumption there will be a considerable shortage in the supply of the wines, as the present year is the third in succession of poor vintages.

Address Suppressed In uRssia.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 18.—The censor's unusual step of suppressing the telegraphic reports of David Lloyd-George's Newcastle speech was taken because of the statesman's declaration that it was time the laboring masses shook off the tyranny of the dukes and landlords. It sounded too much like a Russian revolutionary propaganda.

PRESIDENT OF THE N.Y.C. IN WRECK

Poughkeepsie, N.Y., Oct. 18.—President W. C. Brown of the New York Central Railroad; W. H. Newman, former president of the road, and W. H. Vanderbilt, jr., a director, figured in a railroad wreck at Hinecliffe, on the Husdon River, early yesterday. No one of the party was hurt, but one passenger, a peddler of New York, was killed and ten others were injured, none seriously. A broken rail caused the accident.

Ottawa, Oct. 18.—Miss Muriel Johnston, aged 17, of 289 Gloucester street, took carbolic acid in mistake for medicine and died an hour afterwards. She had contracted typhoid and had been invalided home from Cochrane, Ont., and was thought so far recovered that she could attend to herself.

The Daily Review

MONDAY, OCT. 18, 1909.

THE UNITED STATES

Mr. J. J. Hill says that the United States will soon cease to export foodstuffs. When it reaches that point, it will be necessary for American manufacturers to enlarge their foreign market. The agriculturist, finding that farm produce is no longer an incident of international trade, and that expansion of trade as so understood is limited to the U.S., comes to depend upon the expansion of manufacturing trade, whose chief outlet is the foreign market. Opportunities in farm, timber and other lands are drawing in because these lands are being exhausted, consequently the workers of these lands must seek new pastures. Since the home-market, that is the manufacturing market, takes all that is produced on the farm-lands it follows that the export trade of farm and other land produce no longer presents an opening. The American agricultural industry is dying down to purely local conditions and limitations. The balance of totalized effort is being reached. The home-market has produced a state of equilibrium, and to provide new outlets for future populations it is necessary to provide a stimulus in foreign trade and that stimulus can only be provided in a manufacturing direction. It is this fact that has disturbed Britain, who has turned her attention to her idle lands. Unless when people have enough to eat and enough to wear, etc., they rest content with that there is bound to be a disturbance, and that feeling of unrest precipitates war. That is why war means robbery of the toiler and the enriching of the financier. Mankind cannot eat more than it needs nor wear more than it needs, nor enjoy more than nature calls for. The surplus over that merely serves to aggravate market conditions and upset the equilibrium of comfort under balanced conditions. Increasing population is the only thing to be provided for, and if it has no money to buy it does not effect what is understood as "trade." A small, compressed microcosm or little world—instance furnishes the easily understood example. The farmer need not raise more than is needed. The manufacturer ditto, and so on with other branches of industry, for the foundation of it all is need, not luxury. Trade is merely in the last analysis, an exchange of the products of effort, and where in any direction there is nothing to exchange, from whatever cause, "trade" languishes and of necessity expires. Trade, therefore cannot expand after a certain time. It must remain stationary when the worlds' needs have been caught up with. "Protection" ceases to be of value when others cannot snatch away "protected" means of production. Nature re-asserts herself and then something starts a war. Wars provide waste, and, therefore, a new starting-point. Our civilization is a very mild form of it after all.

ELECTION LAW

Unless Mr. Borden pledges himself to pass a law at the first opportunity for the appointment of a crown prosecutor in election cases, and for the simplifying and shortening of the absurdly and designedly complicated electoral legal procedure at present in vogue, no faith will be put in his professions of electoral purity. We are confident he will do so, however. He is a man of honour and energy. That both parties have a set of crooks who profit by a complicated and lax election law is well-known. These gentry play both parties for their own advantage, and both parties deserve what they get. The English law is short, strict and to the point. It is in every way workable. There is really no electoral corruption in Britain. We could have that state of affairs here—if we wanted it, but the truth is that a strict and workable electoral law would put many of our ambitious and unscrupulous "characters" out of business in short order. Our readers are to blame for the law remaining as it is. It is possible that the growing spirit of independence amongst electors will cure them of their apathy.

Partizanship is cultivated to the limit by the schemers. It is their great stock-in-trade. Without it they would languish and die. Electoral independence will secure better men, for only good men could get that vote.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Canadian navy will impose a burden on Canada that it cannot support. We shall have a crippled Canada and a make-believe navy.

Yesterday was a great day for the temperance cause. Rev. Dr. Crafts made a profound impression upon immense audiences.

Extravagant farming is not necessarily good farming. An Emily farmer's peas were left lying in the field on October 15th. The climate must be a queer one in Emily.

Could not the Canadian Clubs foster a spirit of patriotic interest in the government of the state! What more worthy object for clever men!

In Vermont a stock-taking of the benefits of free rural mail delivery by the farmer, shows that free delivery has increased the value of farms so served very considerably.

Mercy on us. The Waterloo County Teachers' Association has had the temerity to condemn the new school readers and advocate the revival or republication of the old Morang premier. Evidently there are some school teachers who have not the fear of the Educational Department before their eyes.—The British Whig.

The Whig is quite right. Sir James Whitney is the last man to wish to inspire fear. He believes in a free country. How changed from the olden days.

So far the Examiner has been able to quote more or less favourable notices of the respondent in the late protest from obscure rural papers to the number of three or four. This policy may be worked up and carried on to quite an extent, no doubt. But where are the notices of approval from the big journals? Eh! So far these journals have all been condemning "rotten Peterborough." It is pretty hard for our contemporary to work up anything worth while for the simple reason that the people don't believe it or the newspapers either. It's Saturday reference to Mr. Thoburn, of Almonte, who is quoted as approving of Mr. Stratton, and who is quoted as a Conservative who speaks well of Mr. Stratton, is founded, no doubt, on the desire of that gentleman to secure a "saw-off" with West Peterborough, a proceeding that we have every reason for believing was aided and abetted by Mr. Stratton. Mr. Burnham, however, wouldn't "saw," so the project fell through. Doubtless Mr. Thoburn, against whom there is a protest pending, feels that of the two Mr. Stratton is much the more obliging. These facts are so well known as not to be news to anybody. It was common property at the time. However they would have been left to the limbo of oblivion, but for this sinister attempt to show that a Conservative M. P. approves of Mr. Burnham's successful opponent. It was not wise to compel this explanation.

S. A. OFFICERS TO LEAVE LINDSAY

Lindsay, Oct. 16.—Captain Layman, who has been in charge of the local corps of the Salvation Army for the past six months, has received notice from Army Headquarters that he will be transferred to another station.

The officer will report at the Annual Congress in Toronto next week, when he will be formally assigned to his new station.

The news of the departure of Capt. Layman will be received with regret by the members of the Army here as well as the citizens. He has proved himself a zealous and energetic worker; as is evidenced by the progress the Army has made since his appointment there.

His successor has not yet been appointed.

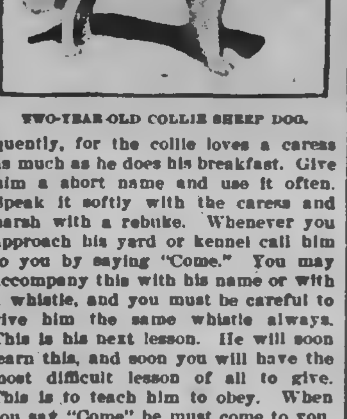
TRAINING A SHEEP DOG.

The First Essential Is to Teach Him to Love You.

If there is anything that a shepherd needs help about it is training a sheep dog, says Professor Arbuckle in the American Sheep Breeder.

You want your dog to come to you as a pup not over two months old, as you want him to know no other master than yourself. At two months he will learn his name and pick up simple lessons. It will be well for him to go where the sheep are, but you must not try to teach him to herd them, nor must you let a ewe with a lamb get close enough to make a pass at him. He must not be frightened with sheep.

The first lesson is to teach him to love you. This is easy. If you are gentle with him and will pet him frequently, for the collie loves a caress as much as he does his breakfast. Give him a short name and use it often. Speak it softly with the caress and harsh with a rebuke. Whenever you approach his yard or kennel call him to you by saying "Come." You may accompany this with his name or with a whistle, and you must be careful to give him the same whistle always. This is his next lesson. He will soon learn this, and soon you will have the most difficult lesson of all to give. This is to teach him to obey. When you say "Come" he must come to you, and he must know that he is compelled to come whether he desires to do so or not.



TWO-YEAR-OLD COLLIE SHEEP DOG.

Just here you and your pup will have your first battle, and if the victory is yours you are well on the way to successful training. If he refuses to come, go after him and bring him to you, caressing him for some time. Then try it over again. Never let him feel that he is having his way, but avoid making a clear issue with him yet, for he must know punishment first, and you must know what form of punishment will suit the individual dog best.

Some day, after you have taught him what "Come" means, he will deliberately run from you just to test you. Keep your patience now and be willing to take two or three hours off just here. It is worth it. Try as before to bring him by caressing, but he is likely to set his head on disobedience, so you must punish him.

Auto Dairymen.

There was a dairymen's convention recently that brought to Chicago milk producers from the five states immediately tributary to the great Elgin and Wisconsin creamery districts. Of those attending 112 were asked as to the use and value of the automobile to them.

Thirty-eight of them own automobiles and use them constantly in business. Eleven own more than one. They are used in marketing butter fats mainly, but seven used the power to operate separators, one to flush his dairy barn, another to operate his bottle washer.

The roads in the creamery district are better than the average country roads, and the automobile most used is a late type, with a tonneau that can be removed, leaving a flat platform for freight.

Contagious and Fatal.

Anthrax is a contagious and fatal disease. An animal so afflicted may, without having shown any sign of disease, drop down in the pasture and die in convulsions in a very short time, or an animal may be apparently well at night and be found dead in the morning. It stops feeding or ruminating a few hours before death. It is then taken with chills and fever, and if its temperature be taken it will be found to be exceedingly high. The treatment for anthrax is useless. The only thing to do is to prevent the balance of the herd from becoming affected. This is done by vaccinating them, and injecting vaccine under the skin with a hypodermic syringe, the results of which are very good.—Dr. David Roberts.

Profit From Sows.

If there is a more profitable breeding animal on a farm than a good sow I have not found it, says a writer in the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago. She has not the habits or makeup to interest all stockmen. So long as the world cannot be fed without pork the sow and her product will be objects of interest to the farming world.

It is a sad commentary on the methods of swine growers that 50 per cent or more of pigs farrowed perish in infancy. It is not reasonable to suppose such a cutting down of the legitimate profits of the business is necessary. Like too many other losses in stock growing, it is largely preventable.

Alfalfa For Sheep.

Alfalfa and sheep go together just as naturally as ducks and water. Alfalfa as a feed has proved beyond doubt that it is far ahead of any other roughage for sheep. All over the west alfalfa is an indispensable factor in winter feeding, and so well do sheep thrive on it that eastern farmers are taking it up after waiting fifty years for the west to set the pace.

Anyhow, the tariff can't be blamed for the kind of hats women insist on wearing.

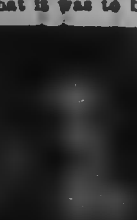
AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Toronto, Canada.—"I shall endeavor to describe to you how I felt before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I scarcely knew what it was to be well. I had awful bearing-down pains and usually before my monthly periods I suffered terribly and had to go to bed. I was not able to walk across the floor the pain was so bad. I doctored for a long time, but the doctor's treatment did not do me any good. I gave up all hopes of ever being well again until one day my husband saw the Compound advertised in the paper. He decided to get me a bottle, and I am thankful he did. I had not taken one bottle before I began to feel better, and I kept on taking it until now I am a different woman. It also helped me during maternity and childbirth. I can thoroughly recommend your Vegetable Compound to any woman who is afflicted with female troubles."—Mrs. J. M. TWEEDALE, 138 Nassau St., Toronto, Canada.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.



THE MESCAL BUTTON.

Its Widespread Use as a Narcotic Among the Indians.

Mescal as a narcotic is used to an extent that is becoming alarming among the American Indians.

Mescal is the product of a cactus which has long been used among the Mexicans as an intoxicant under the name of pellote. The Indians use the mescal button—a kind of bean, very bitter, which is sometimes chewed and sometimes brewed in a kind of tea. It produces hallucinations of such a character as to place this plant in the same rank with hasheesh, opium and other drugs which have produced for men the joys of an artificial paradise.

The Kiowa Indians are said to have used the mescal button from time immemorial in religious ceremonies. Gradually the practice has spread northward. The Poncas and some of their neighbors in Indian Territory and Oklahoma took it up. Thence it extended to the Omahas and Winnebagoes, and now the practice is acquiring a foothold among the Sioux.

The tribes which have longest used it have sent missionaries to introduce their wonderful new medicine among other tribes, and wherever it becomes known its allurements prove irresistible. Clubs are formed for social indulgence in this narcotic. In some cases the students returned from eastern and other boarding schools have become members and promoters of these clubs.

The meetings are usually held in the afternoon. After the mysterious ceremonies in acknowledgment of the secret power of the strange divinity have taken place the buttons are passed around for chewing, four or five to each member, and the tea is brewed and drunk. Only the novice experiences any unpleasant sensation, and this soon passes off. There ensues only a blissful feeling of lassitude, accompanied by a delicious sense of happiness and peace.

One other effect of this remarkable drug may be noted in this brief summary. The mescal takes away all desire for alcoholic drink.—Hampton Institute Southern Workman.

THE TATTLE-TALE.

She Got a Chance to Turn the Title on Her Accuser.

By TEMPLE BAILEY.

(Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.)

Patricia and the professor were the last to leave the breakfast table.

"So Mary Morris and Williston are engaged," the professor remarked. "Everybody is talking about it."

Patricia looked up at him, startled.

"Why, it's a secret!"

The professor shrugged his shoulders. "Nothing is a secret when it is once told, and the news came from our landlady."

"Mrs. Murdoch? Why, I told Mrs. Murdoch," Patricia confessed. "She asked me such direct questions that I couldn't easily evade, but I never dreamed she would tell."

"And Mary Morris never dreamed that you would tell," the professor remarked. "That's the way all gossip begins."

"I think," said Patricia, flaming, "that you are very unpleasant to call it gossip."

"Do you know the name we have for little girls who talk too much?" he asked her gravely.

She shook her head.

"Tattle-tale," he told her.

"Oh," she flung out, "how rude you are!" Then her lip quivered. "You are horrid to make me so uncomfortable!"

When Patricia's lip quivered it was time for a mere man to lay down his weapons, and the professor was beginning hurriedly, "I didn't mean," when Mary Morris appeared at the door.

"Oh, Patricia," she reproached, "did you tell Mrs. Murdoch?"

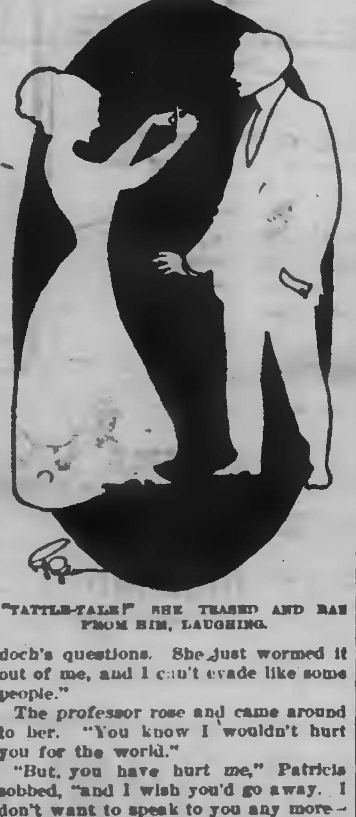
"Yes," Patricia admitted, "I did, but I didn't think she would repeat it, Mary."

"And I didn't think you would," Mary condemned. "I thought you could keep a secret, Patricia."

"Oh, Mary!" Patricia's tone was distressed.

"I thought I could trust you, Patricia." And away she went, and Patricia delivered a passionate opinion to the professor.

"Nobody seems to think that I should have had to lie to evade Mrs. Murdoch's questions. She just wormed it out of me, and I can't evade like some people."



"TATTLE-TALE!" SHE TEASED AND RAN FROM HIM, LAUGHING.

The professor rose and came around to her. "You know I wouldn't hurt you for the world."

"But, you have hurt me," Patricia sobbed, "and I wish you'd go away. I don't want to speak to you any more—to you or to Mary Morris or—anybody!"

Then she fled from the dining room, and the professor had to take his punishment, for Patricia refused to make up. She did not stay for the after breakfast chat that had become so much to the professor. And after dinner she shut herself in her room and could not be coaxed down to sing the Irish melodies that had been the delight of the boarders.

"It's too bad," the professor said in a worried way to Mary Morris.

"Yes," Mary agreed, "but I can't do anything with her. I went to her with tears in my eyes and begged pardon, but she said that you and I were just alike; that we had judged her—and she would abide by our judgment."

"Poor little Pat!" said the professor, tenderly.

He didn't like to say how much he missed her, the little friend whom he had come to know in the big boarding house.

On Saturday he sent her some flowers—pansies tied with pale purple ribbon, with a little card, "For thoughts." And Patricia had sent him a perfunctory little note of thanks and had not worn the pansies. How could he know that she had slept with them against her cheek and had pressed two purple ones in her Testament?

It was all very unpleasant and unhappy, and it might have lasted longer if it had not been for Mrs. Murdoch.

The big landlady told one day a bit of scandal. It related to the husband of a meek little woman who always appeared at the breakfast table in a red tea gown.

Mrs. Murdoch, having breathed her precious bit of news into the ears of a half dozen spinsters, rejoiced in the flurry of exciting comment. And excitement lent to her cheeks when she came in to the Sunday dinner a redness that was increased by the warmth of the day.

This Sunday meal was a dinner to conjure with. The boarders ate and praised, and Mrs. Murdoch was just leaning back in her chair when the husband of the lady who wore the red tea gown burst upon the scene.

He went straight up to Mrs. Murdoch and thundered, "What have you been saying about me to my wife?"

Mrs. Murdoch turned pale. Never before had her sins of gossip been brought home to her. "Nothing," she stammered.

"You have told enough to make her unhappy, to make her accuse me—me. What right had you?"

Mrs. Murdoch took refuge in the excuse of the weak. "Well, I was told"—

"Who told you?" His black eyes swept the board.

The eyes of the six spinsters met his serenely. Not from them had come the first telling of the tale.

But Patricia flushed, as the innocent will at times with the memory of former sins upon them. The flush caught Mrs. Murdoch's desperate eye.

"It seems to me that I heard it from Miss Patricia," she murmured.

"Oh!" Patricia gasped, but before she could say more the professor was on his feet.

"I think you must take that back, Mrs. Murdoch." His voice was stern. "Miss Patricia is incapable of such a thing. I think every one here will agree to that."

"Well," Mrs. Murdoch evaded, "you know she told me about Mary Morris' engagement."

"Because you wormed it out of her, and she was too truthful to be able to evade"—the professor's tones cut like steel—"and I am sure that if this gentleman will investigate the stories he has heard he will find that your source of information was outside of the house, but that within the tale has been spread by you, and you alone.

"And now," he proceeded, "I would suggest that you apologize to Miss Patricia at once or I shall feel compelled to give you notice, and I am sure that others will follow. One can not afford to live where one is likely to be held up in this way."

Mrs. Murdoch's eyes glanced warily about the table, saw that popular opinion was with the professor and surrendered.

"Oh, of course," she said, "I was mistaken. It wasn't Miss Patricia."

"Thank you," the professor said gravely, "and now, as we have only our coffee to forego, I would suggest that your boarders withdraw while you satisfy this gentleman as to the source of your information."

He stalked out at the head of a long line, consisting of Mary Morris and Williston and the six spinsters and, at the very end, Patricia.

When they reached the hall there was a little hubbub of comment and of laughter, under cover of which the professor said to Patricia, "I'd have knocked her down if she had been a man."

Patricia's eyes were shining. "Oh," she said, "how good you were to defend me before all those people!"

"It wasn't entirely unselfish," the professor admitted. "I hoped I might win forgiveness."

And Patricia accorded it, and they went for a walk together in the beauty of the autumn twilight, and when they came back they were engaged.

"I am going to tell everybody," the professor declared.

Patricia's eyes flashed their delight, but her lips were mutinous.

"Tattle-tale!" she teased and ran from him, laughing, to the shelter of her room.

On Keeping a Diary.

Everybody has heard of Mark Twain's caricature of a diary, "Got up, washed and went to bed," and to some people that fling covers the sum and substance of diaries. They don't keep any. Much, however, may be said for the diary. It might sometimes come handy to know where you were and what you were doing on a certain day, though there may be a difference of opinion about the advantage of such knowledge generally. However, we think any well intentioned life can stand a record of its daily doings, and, whether of value or not, such a record becomes increasingly interesting with advancing years. A man of our acquaintance, a young lawyer, was asked, "If you don't keep a diary, how do you know what you were doing last year?" He answered, "I don't want to know what I was doing last year." What this worthy young lawyer said facetiously may be felt by some seriously. There are lots of days that people would be glad to forget, and diaries, of course, make us remember. Here's a good rule for young lawyers, facetious and otherwise, and also for all kinds and conditions of men, in Newark and everywhere else:

Don't do anything you can't write up in a diary.—Newark News.

Cruel.

The would be prima donna paced the floor with nervous emotion. "Julian," she suddenly demanded, "what opera do you think would do justice to my voice?"

"Ah, madam, it would be a pleasure to hear you in the great anvil chorus. Your voice would make the blacksmith scene perfect."

"And the connection between my voice and a blacksmith, sir?"

"The heavy rasp in it, madam—the heavy rasp."

And then Julian escaped from the greenroom just in time to dodge a gilded chair.—Chicago News.

Upon the advice of friends, Mr. Peary has decided to do less talking until he has something more to say.

CULINARY DISCOVERY.

Club Formed For the Dissemination of Novel Cookery.

AS HEARD IN THE TEA ROOM.

Russian Beauty Owner of Scalp-like Necklace—Moyen Age Embroidery a Craze—Characteristic Trimmings For Present Day Gowns.

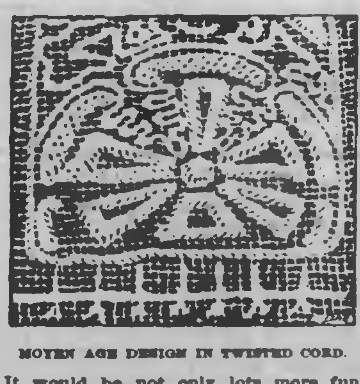
Dear Elsa—We were talking over the topics of the day at a tea room luncheon—your humble scribe and several of her young matron friends who were in town for a day's shopping—and as ever when two or three housekeepers are gathered together the conversation drifted to the old, old story of menu monotony.

"Why," plaintively inquired one of the latest victims of matrimony in our midst, "doesn't some power for good direct my culinary thoughts toward serving delicious little entrees like those we've just dispatched? But," she hopelessly concluded, "the cooks I've had hardly knew how to boil a potato, and one chef in the rough, lately arrived from abroad, actually sent to table a dish of broken up pea pods!"

"What originality!" chimed in Kitty K. "Your cook was a genius in embryo and evidently worked on the theory that the discovery of a new dish was more important than the discovery of a new star. There are"—

"Stars nothing!" interrupted Bridget's ex-mistress. "I showed the stupid creature one day how to string and break up snap beans, and she applied the lesson to the peas."

"Now, children, don't fight," said the pacific member of the party. "Rather listen to a beautiful plan for mutual benefit that I have evolved. Why not start a luncheon club? Oh, yes; I know that the purely social luncheon club is not a novel affair, but mine would have for its object the trying of new dishes and experimenting in new cookery and in original and dainty ways of arranging the table.



MOYEN AGE DESIGN IN TWISTED CORD.

It would be not only lots more fun than the purely social function, but decidedly more instructive."

When the chorus of "Hear, hear!" and "New cookery priestess" and "Go ahead with your ideas" had subsided a vote in the affirmative was given, and the constitution of the club, drawn up unofficially, was somewhat as follows:

"Women belonging to the luncheon club will come together with a common end in view—that of learning something. Culinary ideas are to be exchanged and experiences recounted.

"The club membership is to be limited strictly to the neighborhood, so that if the list becomes too large two of the members may entertain together, thus making the task of serving luncheon to so many less burdensome.

"If two members entertain together, as many as ten may belong to such a club, but if a hostess entertains alone the club cannot number more than six.

"The menu shall be limited to a certain number of courses, and typewritten recipes of the dishes served shall be given to each guest at the said luncheon, to wit—isn't this the real legal thing?—salad and dessert shall not be served at the same meal."

Needless to say, we all signed the pledge instantly and became in turn members of the "Out In the Woods Neighborhood Luncheon club."

It's a splendid notion for housekeepers to get together and compare notes scientifically. It keeps them from getting into a rut in their housework, and it takes away a little of the element of drudgery and brings the work up almost to the level of a cult. So, dear, if there's the slightest chance for the beginning of such an institution in your neighborhood, why not start one? Why not manage to discover an entertaining aspect to the old, tiresome question of "What shall we have to eat?" And in connection with "eats" don't you remember the Van G.'s, who went all to pieces financially in the Wall street panic of a few years ago? Well, there is absolutely nothing left of their enormous wealth but their stunning house in Seventy-second street, which they are trying to sell. In the meantime, to make ends meet, they are taking a few "guests" to help along expenses. Some friends of mine are staying there for a weekly consideration, and, would you believe it, they hardly get enough to eat to keep them alive! In fact, death from starvation would come speedily if New York were not so splendidly provided with hotels and restaurants. The same old style is kept up, and there's no end of lovely things on the table that can't be "fletcherized." Even the candles on the board are ashamed to throw much light on the scarcity of food. Last week they had roast chicken for dinner, which was very good as far as it went, but it didn't go far enough. The next morning they had the dressing fried! Ye gods, what a dish for breakfast! One of the guests balked at this dainty and actually had the nerve to ask for an egg. Naturally some of the dressing was saved, which leftover appeared at luncheon served in ramekins. Now, can you beat that for dastardly economy? It might, though, be passed along to our luncheon club members as a unique dish.

Talking of novelties reminds me of a story I heard about a noted Russian beauty who recently created a sensation at a hotel in Switzerland by appearing one evening in a scalp-like necklace composed of her engagement rings. The rings, it seems—so the A.'s, who are staying in the same hotel with this cruel beauty, wrote me—were strung like brooches upon a background of pearls. The rings, of course, signify the number of conquests made by the fair wearer, but there is a certain heartlessness in carrying the offerings of vanquished admirers strung together like scalps. The American girls are cleverer than their Russian sisters, for when Cupid is dethroned his offerings are usually returned.

To come back to gayer talk, don't you think the moyen age embroidery is stunning? No; I am not an enthusiastic admirer of the style per se, but of the broidery thereon I am a worshiper—the stitchery worked out by the old dames of the middle ages on their borders and designs for breastplates. In spite of the wonderfully good effects produced by machine embroidery, the present dress revival has educated us up to a love for characteristic handiwork. Now, all this preamble merely means that I am at work upon a border pattern which I trust will speedily adorn the tunic of a new crape dinner gown. I have sent you a rough draft of the design. The work is done by means of twisted unbleached string applied over net. Crochet balls are used to add richness to the scheme. It is very little work, this moyen age design, and when finished I will have the consciousness of possessing a frock adornment that I will not meet upon the gown of a friend or enemy. If I stop this gossiping with you I may put in the last stitch this evening. Ever most sincerely yours,

MABEL.

Fortunately future explorers will have cartoons of the North Pole by which to recognize it.

The Inventive Jap.

"We Americans are inclined to pat ourselves on the back for our ingenuity, particularly in the way of labor saving devices, but sometimes the effete Jap outstrips us in our own field," says a woman who employs Japanese servants.

"My Japanese cook, for instance, gave me ever so many little pointers in ways of saving work that have been of great help to me. Some of them are so simple that the wonder is I did not think of them myself.

"Take the tedious process of cleaning a greasy broiler as an example. Every one knows what a task that is, especially after broiling fish. It always requires a lavish use of hot water, a stiff brush and unlimited soap to get rid of the grease and the smell. But what does my Saino do when faced with the same problem? He just thrusts the broiler into the fire for a moment and burns it clean. The grease is taken off, the smell removed and the broiler dried without scouring or scrubbing."

Locusts In Panama.

The method of exterminating locusts most generally adopted in Panama has been to dig a trench about fifty feet in length, two feet wide and one foot deep, with perpendicular sides, in which the locusts are driven by men beating the grass and trees with switches. In this way millions are collected and are destroyed with a solution of strong lye soapsuds. The trench is then refilled with earth so as to allay the odor.

EYELET BORDERS.

Reason Why This Work Is Seldom Well Done.

Few women can work smoothly the open eyelet borders so much seen in madeira embroidery. There are sure to be roughness and unevenness where one eyelet joins another, and the general effect is spoiled.

The reason of this is that the work is not properly done. An instructor who had a number of natives from the island of Madeira exhibiting their work in this country disclosed the secret of the smooth openings.

Each eyelet is outlined with cotton in the usual way, is then slit if the shape be oval and pierced if round and the edges turned back with a needle. This is as any one would do, but in the working of the over and over stitch lies the difference.

Instead of finishing each eyelet at a time, as most of us would do, it is worked half way around on each side to where one opening joins the next one. Then that eyelet is done in the same way, and so on around the entire outer line of the border. The work is then reversed and the upper half of the eyelets embroidered in the same way.

With this treatment there is no unevenness, pulling or ugly ridges where the stitches meet, so hard to avoid by the ordinary method of working.

Grape Juice Cocktails.

Put into each glass three large sliced strawberries when in season or preserved when ripe fruit is not obtainable, a tablespoonful of orange pulp with a little of the orange juice, a teaspoonful of small pieces of bananas, peaches, cherries, white grapes and any other fruit that is at hand; sprinkle in a tablespoonful of sugar and fill the glass with grape juice.

TWO SERIOUS CASES AT HIGH COURT SITTINGS

His Lordship Sir Gwenholme Falconbridge Presiding—Mr. Shirley Denison Crown Prosecutor—Address to Grand Jury.

Two cases, in both of which serious charges are laid, come up for trial at the fall sittings of the High Court of the County of Peterborough, which opened this afternoon before His Lordship, Sir Gwenholme Falconbridge, Chief Justice of the King's Bench.

At a quarter to two, after being addressed by the court, the Grand Jury retired to their room to deliberate upon the finding or non-finding of true bills in the cases. The grand jury is composed as follows: Robert Fair, chairman; V. Eastwood, M. J. Bell, R. Bulloch, Wm. Comstock, P. Costello, R. Hamilton, W. G. Howden, Thomas Huston, Robert Shaw, Fred Stanger and C. W. Waters.

Mr. Shirley Denison, of Toronto, is acting as crown prosecutor, and Mr. D. O'Connell, of O'Connell & Gordon, is appearing for the defence in both cases.

ADDRESS TO GRAND JURY.

In opening his address to the grand jury his Lordship said there were only two cases to be submitted to the jury at the sittings. The first, he said, was one of the most serious offences in the statute books, and could be punished, in the judge's discretion, with death.

The next was one involving a charge of manslaughter. Manslaughter, as a general rule, means (that is the word) means the killing of a person as the result of a sudden fight or quarrel. It is not necessary to have malice aforethought to establish a case of manslaughter. The jury would understand that all killing was not manslaughter. If it was found that the death of Bollard was due directly or indirectly to injuries received at the hands of the Joplings or either one of them, it was their duty to return a true bill.

A man has the right, under the law, to defend himself. In other words, he can, if necessary, kill in his self-defence, but it is possible to use even improper force in self-defence. The law has said in order to defend one's self no more force than is actually necessary must be used.

The court reviewed the features of the case as brought out at the inquest into Bollard's death, and the preliminary hearing. His Lordship gave a general outline of the law bearing on the cases, and the jurors retired.

CHINAMEN WERE CAUGHT RED HANDED BY POLICE

Laundry on Hunter Street Raided — P. C. Newhall and Meagher Watched Gamblers Through Window — Said They Were Playing for Chop Suey—Four Fined at Police Court.

The Chinese laundry of Lee Tong, 232 Hunter street, was raided last night during the progress of a Chinese gambling game, and five of the inmates arrested. The police have been watching the premises for some time past, and it was decided that last night would be the downfall of the frequenters of this joint. Chief Roszel had P. C. Newhall watch the laundry and it was about 11.30 that he and P. C. Meagher, who had been watching the proceedings of the Chinamen inside through a rear window, gained admission into the room and took possession of the spoils. This morning at Police Court, the proprietor, Lee Tong, was fined $50, and the three men who were playing with him, Jim Lee, Lee Ling and John Lee, were each assessed $20. Two other celestials, Lee Nee and Lee Tan, who, according to evidence, were only onlookers, were discharged.

Mr. G. N. Gordon acted in the interests of Lee Tong.

The table which the game had been played on was brought to court and on it was placed the five bottles of lager and a jar of whiskey taken from the laundry. The money which amounted to about $30, and the wooden blocks, resembling dominos, with which the game was played were also produced.

The charge read against Lee Tong by Magistrate Dumble was that he did unlawfully keep a disorderly house to wit, a common gaming house. The accused elected to be tried summarily.

P. C. Newhall told the circumstances of the arrest. His evidence was as follows:

Under instructions I entered Lee Tong's laundry at 232 Hunter street, at 11.45 last night, accompanied by P. C. Meagher. On entering we found that a game had been going on, which is similar to a poker game. A tin box containing $2.35 in five and ten cent pieces was at Lee Tong's right hand. I had seen him put in the money having been on watch for about two hours. There was also dice on the table, which were being used. Money would be put in the centre of the table by four of the Chinamen. Jim Lee, Lee Ling, John Lee and Lee Tong and Lee Nee, Lee Tan and a small boy were watching. During the progress of the game Lee Tong would take some of the money from the "bank" and put it into a box. John Lee was winning most of the time. We were watching through a back window and when Lee Tong and Jim Lee went to get some tea, Lee Tong caught sight of P. C. Meagher and pointed him out to Jim Lee, and this caused a general rush. I called to Lee Tong to open the door. He said, "Who's there." I answered, "the police." Lee Tong made for the box with the money and put it under a mat beneath the table. They then covered the articles on the table with a cloth and threw the bundle under the table. I had to break the back door open. Jim Lee was getting into bed. As we pulled him out he let two dice fall. I told Lee Tong what we came for and asked him for the cash box that he had hidden. He said, "We didn't have no cash box, only playing for fun—no money at all. No dice on the table." Later we found the money box. John Lee had $5.34 in silver and a two dollar bill in his pocket. Lee Tong asked me into a room and offered me $50 if I would let him off and promised not to gamble again. He also made P. C. Meagher a similar offer. They called Chief Roszel over the phone offering $100 if allowed off. It was two hours before we could get them away from the house. Lee Tong said, "We took money from the table for chicken chop suey." The disturbance in the house could be heard across the street and this has been going on during Sunday nights for the past month. I have seen similar occurrences on other occasions. Jim Lee and Lee Tan live in the house.

P. C. Meagher next called, also told of the arrest and the finding of the five bottles of lager and the jar of whiskey in the laundry.

Mr. Gordon asked that the charge against Lee Tong be reduced to one of keeping a disorderly house in the event of the prisoners pleading guilty but Chief Roszel refused to change the information. The fines were paid.

The Magistrate gave the prisoners to understand through their interpreter, that gambling for money would not be allowed and if ever they appeared in court again they would be punished to the full extent of the law.

HAS APPEALED AGAINST JUDGMENT OF MAGISTRATE

Mr. T. Cavanagh, proprietor of the Cavanagh House, has appealed against the judgment of Magistrate Dumble, who made a conviction against the defendant at the police court Saturday. This being the third conviction, besides involving the fine, makes the licensee liable to a forfeiture of his license. Under section No. 92 of the act governing such cases, if it is established that when a man is convicted, under a third offence, the license commissioners must meet within one month and take such steps as would effectually prevent such prosecuted man from selling any more liquor. But under this section of the act an appeal is allowed, and this proceeding has been taken by Mr. Cavanagh. This makes the date under which he must stop selling liquor indefinite, subject, of course, to the end of all local licenses on May 31st.

WEDDING BELLS

SAWLE—McCALLUM.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at St. Andrew's Manse, Saturday afternoon at four o'clock, when Mrs. Annie J. McCallum, eldest daughter of the late Richard Lambe, of Bancroft, was united in marriage to Mr. Chas. H. Sawle, second son of the late Capt. W. T. Sawle, of Welland, and editor of the Peterborough Morning Times, by the Rev. J. G. Potter. The contracting parties were unattended. With the best wishes of a host of friends Mr. and Mrs. Sawle left on the 4.32 C.P.R. train for a trip to Welland and Buffalo, and on their return to the city will reside at 573 Gilmour street.

The many beautiful and costly wedding gifts received evidenced the high esteem in which the bride and groom are held by their friends in the city. Amongst the presents was a handsome easy chair, the gift of Fire Chief Howard and men of the Fire Department.

STAGGERS ARE NOT NECESSARY

In the Stage Drawings of of Irish men—An Objection Entered

Exception has been taken to the way in which "business" was given in connection with the singing of the song, "The Hat My Dear Old Father Wore," at the Opera House the other evening by a comedian in a musical play. In the singing of the number, which told of "father" wearing the hat in a St. Patrick's Day parade, the singer went through staggering antics, representing a drunken man, which deprived the rendition of any fine comedy and was characterized as offensive by many of the audience.

It is about time that theatrical performers realized that it is much better taste to impersonate an Irishman as sober than to persistently caricature him as an individual on a perpetual spree. It wouldn't be half as insulting, either, to Irish people and people of Irish extraction.

THAT WATCH OF YOURS

Is in many respects similar to a railway engine. Let an engine be run without oil or cleaning and before long it will stop dead. Upon examination it will be found that the friction and wear and tear has ruined the machinery, and it is fit only for the scrap iron heap. Likewise your watch. You put it in your pocket, and while there is a kick in it, you, in your mistaken economy, do not consult the watchmaker, and consequently rob your watch of years of good service and also much of its former accuracy. The time keeping qualities of a good watch are maintained and often improved by timely and skilful attention. If you have been one of the neglectful ones call around and see us.

RYERSON RITCHIE GIVES UP HUB WORK

Executive Director of Boston Chamber of Commerce to Resign at Close of the Year

The Boston Journal of Oct. 15th. has the following:

"At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Boston Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon Byerson Ritchie, who came here a year ago to act as executive director, created intense surprise and regret by announcing that it was his intention at the end of his current year of service to sever his connection with the association. He explained that his reason for making the early announcement was to give the Board ample notice of his intention.

President James J. Storrow and director Elwyn G. Preston, John C. Cobb and Bernard J. Rothwell, as well as Secretary James A. McKibben, expressed their regret at the announcement of Mr. Ritchie.

Mr. Ritchie has proven himself a genius at active organization. He made his debut in the work at Kansas City, and his success there led to a call from Cleveland, where he soon became the president of the Chamber of Commerce. He left Cleveland to take up similar work in Detroit, and it was from that city that he was drafted to become executive head of the new centralized business organization of Boston, the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants Association.

When Mr. Ritchie came to Boston a year ago, the Merchants' Association had a membership of 467 and the Chamber of Commerce 1,000. Including those who were elected to membership yesterday the Boston Chamber of Commerce now has 3,131 members and constitutes the largest bona-fide commercial organization in the United States."

GIVEN A CHANCE TO DO BETTER

Young Man Who Was Charged With Theft Was Discharged

The young man implicated in the theft of the gold watch and a sum of money from the residence of John Londry, Bethune street, on the 9th of June last, and who returned and gave himself up last week, was discharged by Magistrate Dumble this morning. No evidence was taken. Mr. G. N. Gordon, who acted for the defendant, asked his Worship to deal leniently with the young man and give him a chance to do better by allowing him to go free.

Chief Roszel was inclined to favor it being done, and the Magistrate, after warning the young man as to his future behaviour, allowed him to go.

STYLE IN FURS

THE beauty and shape that are in Barrie's Furs are there when you buy them, and stay there while wearing, for months and years.

Is not that something you want when you buy Furs? For Furs are really an investment when wisely bought.

These things can't be said of ordinary ready-made Furs. They are fair up to a certain point. When that point is passed durability drops out of sight.

BARRIE'S FURS have and retain shape and finish because they are manufactured on the premises. Fur making is essentially a hand-made accomplishment. Machinery can do little in the making.

The materials are there. Each one good for the price asked. But all have style, finish and that chic effect that is worked into the goods, because of the know-how in the making.

It's not too early to inspect the Fur styles. It is a desirable thing to do, while the assortment is practically unbroken.

PETERBOROUGH LOST FIRST GAME TO PARKDALE C. C.

Locals Made Many Fumbles and Left the Field Open for Parkdale to Score—Peterborough Needs Good, Hard Practice.

Parkdale Canoe Club 31.
Peterborough 1.

To be beaten in their first senior O.R.F.U. game, on their own grounds, and by a team which, while doing some good kicking, was not any faster, was the fate of the local football players Saturday afternoon at Riverside Park. By way of rubbing it in, the weather man dished up a good variety of wet weather, and this made the affair appear more gloomy. A fair sized crowd of faithfuls was on hand good and early, and gave a mighty cheer when the locals got the first point of the game, but their services were not required to any great extent during the rest of the exhibition. Probably the most spectacular play of the afternoon was Quinlan's run from centre field to the deadline, almost, but what looked like a sure touch was stopped by a faster sprinter of the opposing side and there was nothing doing. The locals were right on at the tackling game, and on several occasions the passing was of the atta-up-and-take notice kind, but the backs made a serious mistake. They did not play their positions, and this was partly responsible for Parkdale making most of their 31 points. Most of the counters were made on touches, which should have been stopped. It was not a case of the winners playing a dazzling passing game. They were on to the locals' style of play, for when Craig or the halvers would run out for a long pass, the visitors would intercept the ball and make big gains, either by a run or at kicking, and these would eventually result in points. The locals' scrimmage and wing men did well, in fact they had the better of the argument on many occasions, but by an unfortunate fumble would lose the ground gained. The visitors took every advantage of their opponents' misplays, but at that their playing was not up to expectations, considering the amount of practice the team has had. The locals have the goods all right, and with consistent practicing will make good in their future games.

The following is a summary of the play;—

Peterborough kicked off, and on some fast following up scored a rouge. A. Dissette got away, with a nice run for 25 yards, but dropped the ball on the tackle. The play continued in centre field for some time. Craig got the ball and passed to Quinlan, who made the run of the day, but was tackled when within a few feet of the Parkdale line, and lost the ball. When the ball was in play near the 25 yard line, Brockbank secured it and ran for a touch, which J. Dissette converted. The play was somewhat of a fluke. The locals thought that the ball was dead, and ceased playing, but the whistle had not blown and the score counted. No more scoring was done in the first quarter. Score, Parkdale 6; Peterborough 1.

Corkery secured the ball in the kick-off, but was tackled. On Peterborough's second down Quinlan received the ball, but his pass was blocked. Campbell made a short run, but was tackled. Parkdale kicked and Craig, Quinlan and Corkery made a gain on some nice passing. Parkdale got the ball near the Peterborough line and went over for a touch. J. Dissette failed to convert. Parkdale 11; Peterborough 1.

Half time.

Quinlan kicked off and the ball was returned. Quinlan kicked again. Parkdale had the better of the play. Craig rouged. Parkdale 12; Peterborough 1. A few minutes later Quinlan was behind the line for a safety touch. Parkdale 14; Peterborough 1. Hayes went over for another touch, but the convert failed. Parkdale 20; Peterborough 1. Another point was made, when Parkdale kicked on the deadline, and three-quarter time was called with the ball in centre field. Score, Parkdale 21; Peterborough 1.

Parkdale kicked off, and Craig caught the ball and returned it. On Parkdale's second down, Cromar kicked. Quinlan took the ball and passed to Craig, who fumbled. Beddoe kicked on the line. Quinlan rouged.

Parkdale 22; Peterborough 1.

Campbell pulled off a fine run, but it was wasted. Parkdale came close to Peterborough's line and soon made another touch. Parkdale 26; Peterborough 1.

The last touch was an easy one for Parkdale. On a series of fumbles Meagher kicked the ball over the line, with no interference, and Brockbank fell on it. Baillie converted. Full time. Score, Parkdale 31; Peterborough 1.

Referee—Dr. A. W. MacPherson, Peterborough. Umpire, Dr. Brown, Toronto.

The teams;—

Peterborough—Full back, Craig; halves, Cahill, Quinlan and Corkery; quarter, Campbell; scrimmage, Ecclestone, Clarke and Thornton; wings, Dickson, Hickey, O'Connor, Davidson, Lundy and Hall.

Parkdale Canoe Club—Full back, Baillie; halves, Cromar, Beddoe and Meagher; quarter, J. Dissette; scrimmage, Leonard, Addison and Duncan; wings, middle, Durand, Adams; inside, Harper and Crawford; outside, Brockbank and A. Dissette.

WRESTLING

Mustapha Mehemedof, the Turkish wrestler, secured by George Kennedy on his present tour through Europe, arrived in Montreal yesterday and will probably be seen in a match here at an early date. The Turk was accompanied by Mr. Dumont, a French promoter, who has organized most of the big European tournaments of recent years. Dumont has entered into an arrangement with the Canadian Athletic club whereby some of the best of the many wrestlers he has under contract will be toured in America this year under Canadian Athletic club auspices. Dumont and the Turk arrived in New York on Monday by La Savoie, and came on at once to Montreal. The Turk is 6 feet in height and weighs 220 pounds, all bone and muscle. He holds a victory over last year's sensation, Yussiff Mahmout.

Raoul de Rouen will be back in America again this winter. He is expected to arrive here about November 1st.

Negotiations are still being carried on for matches between Tremblay and Billiter, and Tremblay and Lurtberg, but nothing has been closed as yet.

The 57th Regimental Band will practise to-night at 8 o'clock for the first of its series of band concerts in the Armouries.

FAMOUS SINGER AND TEACHER

Probably no singer whose name is familiar to the public has ever had so large repertoire as Mme. Blanche Marchesi, who will be heard in concert at the Grand on Thanksgiving evening, Oct. 25. Mme. Marchesi, who has been called the world's greatest interpreter of song, and with good reason, has been a student of music since her earliest childhood. She has always lived in the very highest musical atmosphere. As her mother is the foremost teacher of the voice the world has ever known, Mme. Blanche Marchesi has had constant opportunity to study the musical literature of all great nations, and she has taken full advantage of this opportunity. Since childhood Mme. Marchesi has been a student of song, its literature and its musical and dramatic purpose. In the course of her studies she has been called upon to estimate the art value of tens of thousands of songs, not to mention hundreds of arias from the standard operas, cantatatas and oratorios. At present Mme. Marchesi is devoting her greatest attention to the songs of all periods, and as she speaks seven languages fluently, namely, English, German, French, Italian, Spanish, Swedish and Russian, she has exceptional opportunities for studying them in their original tongues, and of interpreting them accordingly. Mme. Marchesi's library of music is almost a museum in itself. Not a song of any value in any known language that has not found a place in this library. Many of these songs are still in manuscript, and quite a number of them were dedicated to Mme. Marchesi by their respective composers. No wonder, then, that during this, her second American tour, Mme. Marchesi, knowing the tastes of our people better than she did a year ago, will be able to offer programmes of songs such as have never before been presented in this country.

Debarred From Canada.

The Countess of Aberdeen is now in Canada in connection with the quinquennial gathering of the international council of women. "Lord Aberdeen, even if he had not been lord lieutenant of Ireland," says the Manchester Guardian, "would not have been free to accompany the countess to Canada, for the Dominion has a curious unwritten law. It is that no one who has held the position of governor general should ever return. This is because a returning governor general would have to take an inferior rank to that he had formerly held. There are four former governors general still living—the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Aberdeen and the Earl of Minto—and by this law they are forever debarred from revisiting Canada."

Easily Remedied.

An old lawyer who is a noted wit has for a partner another old fellow who is very conservative and straitlaced. Recently the wit remarked to his partner that it was advisable to employ a female stenographer in the office, maintaining that stenographers of that variety were much more satisfactory than males.

But the partner didn't like the idea.

"My dear fellow," he objected, "I don't think it would be proper. It wouldn't do, wouldn't do at all. You see, here I should be in the office hour after hour every day, quite alone with the young lady, and"—

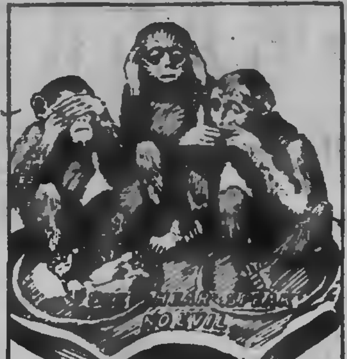
"Well," observed the wit, with a twinkling eye, "couldn't you holler?"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

THE BILLIKEN RIVAL.

Sacred Monkeys of Nikko Serve as Inspiration For Bric-a-brac.

All sorts of charming ideas and objects come from Japan nowadays, American skill and ingenuity adding to oriental appeal occidental use and application. The "Japanese sacred monkeys" from the famous Nikko temple of Iyeyasu offer a new and clever adaptation of Japanese wisdom and artistic excellence to American pleasure and employment.

The "wise monkeys" that for uncounted centuries have adorned that world renowned Nikko avenue of cedars, twenty miles in length, which leads to the river at the base of Nikko's sacred hill, during all these centuries have offered to the world a great message—"Hear, see and speak no evil." This message, as valuable and important today as when first evolved, now speaks to the American world with new and redoubled emphasis, the quaint picturesqueness of the three monkeys, respectively covering eyes, ears and mouth with their oddly human fingers, lending special vim to their impressive accents. The lotus leaf, emblem of peace and joy and happiness, also has been called into timely use.



AN ARTISTIC AND "LUCKY" INKSTAND.

The "wise monkeys" that from candlesticks, match holders, incense burners and so on preach an effective silent sermon to the world at large have for originator Miss Louise Hirtsel of Chicago, already known for her artistic efforts; for sponsor, Milton A. Waldman, who first conceived the idea of using the "wise monkeys" for artistic and moral ends.

"Splendid! Just the sort of stimulating suggestion we all need!" cried Miss Hirtsel, all enthusiasm and delight, upon sharing her associate's inspection, and she immediately proceeded to elaborate the basic "wise monkeys" idea into the clever and cunning "O-Nik-Ko" simians that presently caused so many people to "think right."

The "wise monkeys" now are created in several arrangements and with several settings, but perhaps the prettiest and most popular article of all is the incense burner, or pen tray, which represents them as seated on a green and naturally curling lotus leaf, expressive tails arranged in most expressive manner, expressive heads and hands most effectively posed. Traced on the lotus leaf in front of the group runs their inseparable legend, "Hear, see and speak no evil." It is safe to say that many a man and woman, buying the group for reasons of quaintness and artistic or "lucky" attraction, will receive distinct mental and spiritual uplift from the warning thus cleverly conveyed.

The thought back of this legend is very old, almost as old as Christianity or Buddhism, and in Japan it also finds expression in connection with the "three little maids" who on many a fan and lantern and kakemono also press determined fingers to lips and ears and eyes. But the "wise monkeys" of the strange and lovely temple of Ieyeyasm are far older than the perennially and perpetually youthful maidens who prettily teach the same lesson, and they impress it with greater force and meaning.

"Until you have seen Nikko you cannot say Gikko," runs the Japanese proverb, "gikko" meaning beautiful. It might not unsuitably be parodied, "Until you have made the acquaintance of the 'wise monkeys' you have missed something of the gladness and wisdom that come with right seeing, right hearing, right speech."

Luxurious Silver Cleaning.

A young engineer who has lived much of his life on ships has adopted many of the conveniences of shipboard for use in the new home where he has taken his bride. Among them is silver cleaning by electricity.

A miniature motor, six inches long and four inches high, is used. It can be clamped to the kitchen table and put away when not needed. A wire is run from the motor to any convenient electric light fixture. It is supplied with a button on the switch.

To the shaft of the motor is attached a buffer wheel made of very soft leather. After the silver is washed free of dirt it is left rather damp. A little silver powder is put on the wheel, and the weekly silver is brightly burnished in a few minutes.
